Farm Reminders

The farm bureau is not a marketing association, but is interested in bringing into active operation such marketing associations as are essential to proper marketing of farm produce. A national committee of 17 has been appointed to develop a grain market plan, and of 15 to work out a better plan for the marketing of livestock.

Several smut resistant wheats have been found, and at least one variety is apparently immune to the disease. The real solution to the smut problem in Oregon is the discovery and development of immune types adapted to commercial production in the different wheat growing areas. More than a thousand different varieties and strains have been tested so far.

"Douglas county, Washington now has the best Turkey seed wheat in the state as a result of the ear lot shipment from Sherman county, Oregon," says Professor Hegnauer, extension agronomist at the Washington State College. "Your station has made our farmers a good many dollars on increased price received for seed wheat," writes C. E. Hill, superintendent of the Waterville branch station to D. E. Stephens, the Morton station man who developed the strain.

Youthful Blouses and Smocks

OVERBLOUSES—which is another name for smocks—and blouses for young misses show that the needs and the likings of school girls. From 12 years upward, have been carefully considered. Designers have spent thought and time on them, and in the shapes that cater to the best informed clientele they are to be found in materials and styles appropriate to the school girl and so made and ornamented as to express her sweet, very youthful, personality. Many of them are in wool jersey, mostly long-sleeved with narrow girdles of the material and made in the regulation style, as shown above, or a surprise fashion. Necks are round, set some up to the neckline at the neck usually. Wool yarn or silk have a needle-work and embroidery, and occasionally applique of goods in contrasting colors, with needle-work, apron cloth and crocheted flowers are used for the very clever embellishments which dress up or come down the colors used, and colors include dark and strong blues, taupe, brown, beige and red. Yarn embroideries, yarn fringes and angora cloth in bands and cuffs make a fine combination with wool jersey. Blouses with the regulation waist line are made for the young miss in dainty or pongee and with Buster Brown or open collars. There is almost no trimming on them. The middle must not be overlooked when the talk is of things for school wear. It is shown in blue and dark red flannel, with the usual decoration of narrow white braid with insignia embroidered on the sleeves; and it is always good style; but choice lies between it and overblouses. Of the latter a fine example is pictured here, made of wool jersey with needle-work and applique in a light color.
