

STUBBORNNESS

By ADDIE GRAVES.

They had not spoken to each other for twenty-two years, and during that time nine children had been born to them. When the first child was two years old they had had a bitter exchange of words—words that could not be forgotten on either side. But a short time after the first child the second child entered this world, so, although both had sworn never to speak—"until their dying day"—they continued to live together as man and wife. This happened years ago, when a divorce was a very rare proceeding and a home was seldom deserted, even by the greatest provocation.

When they were married he was nineteen and she sixteen. So, at the end of twenty-two years both were still young. It was strange that youth could be so stubborn. This was explained by their Puritan ancestry, from which they inherited the iron-bound obstinacy they termed principle. The spoken word must be kept at any cost.

It was a strange life, but during all these years the tragedies, accidents and comedies of existence had not broken the silence. It was an exceedingly odd but not unpleasant experience to visitors to enter into such a home life. Contrary to expectations, the family were exceptionally entertaining, all being fine musicians and persons of culture, making them agreeable companions. In fact, the household was noted for its charming hospitality.

Any information required or which was desired given by the parents was transferred through the children by word of mouth, or, if too young, the subject matter was written and delivered in that form. It was quite convenient, there were so many children. Neither parent tried to lower the other in the estimation of the children; it was simply a case of each keeping his dignity preserved and his word intact. There were weddings and death in the home, but even these did not alter the situation. If the house had burned it would still have been the same.

All the children "turned out" exceedingly well, the eldest developing into a skillful surgeon. One day in summer he and his wife were visiting the old homestead, which was situated in the country. The weather was exceptionally hot—so hot that no one had been able to sleep well for several nights. The doctor made some lemonade and took it out to the family, who were all sitting under the twin maples in the front yard. In a short time it was noticed that the father was sleeping. Not until supper was ready did anyone try to wake him. When it was tried he could not be roused. Alarmed, they carried him to the house and laid him on a couch in the living room. The doctor soon stayed with him until the others finished the hurried meal, when the sleeper awoke. He looked at his son and inquired what had happened.

"I think, father, your heart may be a little wrong—don't you think—since anything should happen—you had better tell me your wishes?"

A surprising look of gladness—for a dying person—flashed over the father's face.

"Yes, son, bring mother."

But mother's face was twisted with grief as she threw herself upon the prostrate form.

"Mary!"—"John!"—simultaneously.

The doctor left the room and appeared to the astounded children with a wide grin on his face.

"They are having a heavenly time in there," directing his thumb toward the door he had just emerged from—"the sweetest honeymoon—they are the bluest, spoonest couple you could imagine. I gave father a stiff dose of bromide in his lemonade; there's not a thing ails him. I just took advantage of a good opportunity. Pretty rough treatment to cause a man to think he might be dying, but I thought the case needed and deserved it."

Replanting North Woods.

There are people who have never been above Troy, N. Y., who nevertheless speak wistfully of the north woods. They have been expecting to visit that inspiring wilderness for years and will plan for it for years to come, whether they ever go or not. If they knew how dangerous those reaches of forest, though they seem almost endless, have been threatened by fire and the pulp mill's saw they would rejoice to hear that Quebec now is planting two pine or spruce trees for every one that is destroyed.

So the north woods will still be there when at last your hunting trip is made. Three million pines and spruces have been planted this year.

Beavers Multiply Rapidly.

Beavers in the national forests have increased rapidly within the last few years, a count made by rangers of the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture, shows. Two years ago in the Cochetopa forest in southwestern Colorado there were 200 beavers, estimating four or five inhabitants to each house, a conservative estimate. This year there are 12,000 of the animals. This rapid increase of family among the beaver tribe inures plenty of the popular fur for milady's wear for an indefinite time. At the last which now protect the animal are not relaxed too much.
