FAIRBANKS NEXT PICTURE AN ELABORATE PRODUCTION

The management of the Star Theatre has had every assurance from the United Artists Corporation that the next production made by Douglas Fairbanks to be shown here Friday, June 17, is the most elaborate costly and stupendous picture he has ever turned out from his California studio. When "Doug" began his picture, immediately after he had finished his first United Artists release, His Majesty the American, he called a conference of all his associates at his studio in Hollywood, California, and told them his idea for the next story. Every one was astonished. "Doug" was absolutely determined that he was going to do something daring and with that he insisted that every thing from beginning to end had to be of the most elaborate order. He went so far as to insist in his story that an entire city such as may be found throughout the middle western section of the United States, be destroyed in providing one of the spectacular punches in the production. And the destruction was not to be an ordinary destruction. It had to be a flood. The proposition seemed almost impossible, but to "Doug" there has never been anything that he can't do when he wants to. And a flood it was. He spared no expense in reproducing this particular company, the smallest detail having been carefully carried out so as to enable the presentation of the most genuine character of realism obtainable. A location in the foothills of the Cascade mountains, Northern California, about two square miles in area, furnished the site for the city. A hundred or more carpenters and laborers, under the supervision of Robert Fairbanks, production manager, were utilized in the construction work which covered a period of one month in necessary preparation. With the use of four massive electric pumps, more than one million gallons of water were drawn from the Sacramento river and stored in a specially constructed reservoir at the highest point of the new city. Numerous scenes were filmed in the city the final one being the spectacular destruction of the little settlement by the flood. The huge gates of the reservoir raised and the water assisted by the steep grade of the mountain, rushed into the foothills, carrying everything before it. Dwellings, churches, theatres, bridges and railroad lines were piled up in masses of debris. Not only in these scenes alone was "Doug" granted opportunities to do some wonderfully clever stunts, but all through the picture he does new tricks that will give many thrills to those who glory in his red blooded manner of working. In a number of the scenes of the picture more than one thousand extras were used, which in itself will give an idea of the stupendous scope of the production. A star like Fairbanks knows his own qualifications best. This story was conceived by "Doug" himself, and he has put into it every conceivable thing he has ever dreamed of. With these things in mind a slight idea of the action he puts into this picture will be possible.—Advertisement.
