TWELVE-DOLLAR HORSEPOWER

THE GREATER PART of the hydro-electric power generated and used in the province of Ontario is publicly owned by the provincial government and distributed through the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

A project called the Queenston-Chippawa power development at Niagara Falls, now nearing completion, will produce 500,000 horsepower at an estimated cost of $60,000,000. This will bring the total power investment of the province up to $210,000,000. The total electric energy purchased and generated by the commission amounts to about 440,000 horsepower.

The total capital invested in its present going plant is $135 per horsepower. In the new plant the investment will be $125 per horsepower. This would mean an annual cost per horsepower of $12 as compared with $60 to $70 for steam generated power. It is proposed to sell surplus power to American consumers until Canadian customers demand the entire output.

The development of power in Oregon can probably be done as cheaply as at Niagara. The Celilo project it is estimated can produce 800,000 horsepower at a cost of less than $100 per horsepower. If this can be done it should be delivered in Portland at much less than $20 per horsepower. It is estimated that power can be taken from the Deschutes river at less than this initial cost.

Oregon is talking about its waterpower while Ontario is developing and selling its power, and by its use is increasing its home industries by leaps and bounds. If electrical energy can be delivered at Oregon factories for $20 or less, it is inexcusable waste of resources to let it run idle to the sea.—Portland Telegram.

Stories of Great Scouts

By Elmo Scott Watson

THE EXPLOIT OF PIONEER SCOUT ANDREW POE

Andrew and Adam Poe, two brothers, were scouts in the pioneer days of Ohio. One day when the Poe brothers were leading a party on the trail of a band of Indians who had raided the settlements, they left their men to try to locate the savages. The brothers became separated. On the bank of a river Andrew came upon a giant Wyandot chief and a smaller Indian who were standing with their rifles cocked but looking in another direction.

Poe's rifle missed fire when he shot at the chief and the Indians at once discovered him. Before they could shoot, the scout sprang upon them, seizing both around the neck. The small Indian jerked loose first and while the chief held Poe, his companion tried to get in a death blow with his tomahawk. Andrew allowed him to come close. Then with one mighty kick he planted his foot in the Indian's stomach, hurling him backward and knocking the hatchet from his hand.

When the little Indian got his breath back and recovered his tomahawk, he advanced to the attack again and succeeded in wounding Poe in the arm. A second later the scout pulled himself from the grasp of the chief, seized one of the Indians' guns and shot the warrior as he advanced to attack him a third time. Poe was no longer fighting against odds and he immediately attacked the chief.

The ground was wet and slippery. In another moment the Indian and the white man, locked in each other's arms, fell into the water and each began trying to drown the other. Finally Poe seized his enemy by the scalp lock and held his head under water until he believed the chief was dead.

When he released his hold, however, the redskin renewed the struggle. By this time they were fighting in deep water. Seemingly at the same time both thought of the one loaded rifle on the shore and both started to swim to get it. The Indian was the better swimmer and reached the bank first. As the chief picked up the gun, Poe turned back in the water and began diving to avoid a bullet. The chief, however, had picked up an empty gun, the one with which Andrew had killed the little Indian, and before the Wyandot could get the loaded weapon, Adam Poe, who had heard the shot, came running to his brother's rescue. He fired and the Indian fell dead.

G. U. Krebs who formerly operated a big stock ranch on upper Willow creek and Balm Fork, but who has been living near Portland a few years, was in town a day or two during the week shaking hands with friends. Mr. Krebs has been spending some time with his son on the latters ranch near Cecil. Alfalfa, sheep and cattle still have a pretty strong pull on Mr. Krebs' interest.

John McNamee was in from his summer sheep camps near Starkey, Oregon during the week and reports the sheep are doing fine this summer. "All as fat as butter," says John, "but the price is not what it should be." Mr. McNamee was about to ship a few cars of fat lambs to the Portland market but after getting returns from a friend of his who recently bought a band of weathers in the same section, at $2.75, shipped them to Portland and sold them for $2.10 thus netting a loss of 65 cents plus all freight and other expenses, he decided to let his lambs stay on the range.

L. A. Hunt, for the past two and one-half years the efficient county agent of this county, who recently resigned that position to accept the management of the Oregon Hay Growers Association, is busy closing up his affairs here preparatory to taking up his new duties. Mr. Hunt's family have already moved to Horniston which will be their home in the future. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt have made many warm friends during their sojourn in this county, all of whom will join in best wishes for their future welfare.

It's Toasted

Two cars a day are shipped out from the Morgan plant of the natural hard surfacing road material which was discovered there last winter. The material seems to be a mixture of sand, alkali and cement and when mixed with the "hot stuff" used for the top dressing is said to add greatly to its wearing quality. One hundred and fifty thousand tons have been contracted.
