The KITCHEN CABINET

Though man a thinking being is defined. Few use the grand prerogative of mind. How few think justly of the thinking few? How many never think, who think they do! —Jane Taylor.

ONE-DISH DINNERS.

For the maidless home or the busy day there is nothing that quite takes the place of the one-meal dish. This may be cooked in one dish or served from the kitchen all on one plate.

Mutton and Vegetables. — Brown in sweet fat in a hot frying pan a pound, more or less, of mutton. When the mutton is well cooked, add a cupful or more of sliced carrots, and if the onion flavor is liked, one small onion; adding water to cover, and let simmer on the back part of the stove for two or three hours. The meat sauce may be thickened slightly and served with boiled potatoes, all arranged on a hot dinner plate.

Baked Pork Chops.—Chops or steak may be used for this dish. Slice sufficient potatoes to serve the family, season with salt and pepper and cover with the pork steak, well seasoned on both sides. Use a large, shallow baking pan to give plenty of surface to the heat, and bake in a moderate oven for two hours or until the potatoes are soft. A sliced onion improves this dish, if the family has been properly educated to appreciate this wholesome vegetable.

Spanish Meat Dish.—Arrange a layer of sliced raw potatoes in a baking dish, add a finely shredded onion, a cupful of beef gravy and slices of the meat to cover the top. Pour over a cupful or more of tomatoes and bake in a moderate oven until the potatoes are tender. Before serving sprinkle the top of the dish with a few cooked peas for a garnish and serve from a dish.

American Chop Suey.—Take one-half pound of round steak, cut in dice, and brown in hot suet fat, add one small sausage link, two large onions, one-third of a box of spaghetti and one-third of a quart of strained tomato. Boil the spaghetti, and after cooking the other ingredients for two hours serve with the hot spaghetti. Season well with salt, pepper, paprika and a sprinkling of sugar.

Stories of Great Scouts

By Elmo Scott Watson

LEWIS WETZEL, "DEATH WIND OF THE DELAWARES"

Many of the great scouts did not become Indian fighters until they were men, but Lewis Wetzel started early. He killed his first Indian when he was only thirteen years old. Wetzel was born in Virginia in 1752. His father moved to the present site of Wheeling, W. Va., and was killed there by the Indians before the eyes of his sons. Lewis swore eternal enmity against all Redskins.

One day while he and his brother were roaming in the woods they were attacked by Indians. Lewis killed one of the savages and the next instant was hit by a bullet which carried away a piece of his breast bone. Both boys were taken captive. That night while the Indians slept, Wetzel worked loose the thongs which bound him and then fastened his brother.

After the boys had fled for about a mile they discovered that their pursuers were torn to shreds. Leaving his brother in hiding, Lewis returned to the Indian camp and, undetected by the sleeping savages, robbed them of two pairs of moccasins as well as a gun and some powder and lead.

The next morning the Indians were hot on their trail and soon were close upon them. As the Indians approached, the boys stepped out of the trail into a clump of bushes, allowing their pursuers to speed past, and then they followed. Soon they heard the Indians coming back and again they stepped into the bushes and hid. The Wetzel boys played this dangerous game of hide-and-seek several times before they finally eluded the savages and returned in safety to their home.

When Lewis Wetzel grew older he crossed over into Ohio and soon became one of the best-known scouts in the country.

Wetzel was called "The Death Wind" by the Delawarees whom he hated particularly. More than once a Delaware warrior trembled with fear as he heard a shrill, moaning cry echoing through the forest, for it usually was followed soon afterward by a shot from the scout's deadly weapon which ended the Redskin's life.

In his later years Wetzel lost the respect of many people because he began killing all Indians he met, whether hostile or friendly, and several times he was imprisoned for shooting numbers of peaceable tribes. In his last days he became a lonely, bitter old man until death came to him in 1838.

"BIRDIOLA"

By LILLIAN CYR.

(Copyright, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Theed, in spotless white flannels, sauntered aimlessly down the sun-baked sidewalk in Newspaper Row. It was June, and the abhorred quest for education was temporarily suspended. In September he would enter Worcester high, as a junior, an estimable acquisition in Theed's opinion. He slowed down to a halt in front of a hitching post, and, having languidly reached out for its iron ring, he twirled it absently.

He was in one of those day-dreams boys have. His eyes remained open; but he saw nothing. It has to be admitted that three-quarters of Theed's dream, waking and sleeping, were of Anita, the girl who wore his fraternity pin, and whose lovely hand he had kissed in a paragon in which they had been the star performers.

He turned back up Newspaper row and down Old South to Anita's home. He hesitated with bewildering indecision at her gate, slowness or some other boyish attribute, having seized him; then he walked away. He soon returned, playing a melancholy air on a newly bought small instrument of baked clay, called a "Birdiola," said instrument containing ten holes for ten fingers and capable of a series of wondrous and depressing whistling tones.

He had nearly passed the house when Anita hailed him from the piazza.

"I'm on up, and have some lemonade," she invited.

He pocketed his instrument and sank down in a comfortable wicker chair, while the little hostess presided over the drinks and edibles.

"What is it?" asked Anita, not without some curiosity, "that thing you were blowing?"

"This," said Theed, holding up the instrument, and adopting the manner and the fluency of the young clerk in the music store who sold it to him, "is a 'birdiola,' an instrument of rare quality. From it one may induce the calls, the whistles of any bird, or all birds."

"Here comes Fred. Hello, Freddie," called Anita sweetly. "Oh, I'm so glad you brought your clarinet."

"Hello, Laurie, old top," said Fred, amiably.

"How'd'y do," Theed responded, stully. He thoroughly disliked Fred and his clarinet.

A bit later the two boys rose to go. "I'm glad you boys are coming to my party," smiled Anita, "and Freddie, bring your clarinet."

The day for Anita's party arrived. Theed made an elaborate toilet and proceeded to Anita's.

A few minutes before the dancing began Theed made his way to Anita's side to claim her first dance.

"I just promised Fred," said Anita. "You promised it to me Monday afternoon when we were sitting in the hammock. Don't you remember?" asked Theed, pained that she should have forgotten that wondrous incident.

"No."

"Well, this is my dance, Anita. You promised me first." Theed declared stubbornly.

"Here comes Fred. Hurry, Theed. Find a partner before the dance begins."

Theed stared at her in amazement. "Very well," he said coldly.

And he did find a partner. A visiting girl received him tenderly.

At first he was a bit bored, his mind more on Anita's behavior than the lively talk of his companion, but she really was interesting, and Theed could not help coming out of his bad mood.

Great was Anita's indignation to find him so absorbed in that visitor that he had not returned to her for a single dance.

During an intermission Anita had Fred play his clarinet. At the first soft tentative foot Theed rose and slipped out of the room.

Fred was part through his ovation when he was startled by the wild trilling of a birdcall, which was repeated at intervals to the end of his recital. In several parts of his song sleepy bleats and "moos" suggestive of cows exchanged places with the short, tentative notes and issued from his clarinet in rural discord. At the end of the song, however, polite clapping greeted Fred.

Anita, he begged, "explain to them. That bird outside. Oh, my reputation's lost!" He was breathless and his complexion assumed a bright pink.

"Just then through the open window there floated a melancholy air. Both Fred and Anita recognized the dreadful whistling tones as those of Theed's 'birdiola.'" Fred was angry. Anita was pleased at Theed's flare of jealousy.

The mournful tone was touching, even if the tones were depressing. Anita ran out on the piazza and shut the screen door softly behind her.

"Theed," she called tremulously. Anita sat down in a chair beside him. "Play for me," she commanded.

Theed brightened visibly and raised the "birdiola" to his lips. Light-hearted once more, the depressing whistling tones of the "birdiola" grated on Anita's sensibilities. "Theed," she said solemnly, "your 'birdiola' has become very dear to us. Please give it to me and I will keep it and cherish it forever and ever."

A wise little miss, Anita. She was insuring quiet enjoyment for herself in Theed's future visits. It was true that the instrument had bridged the estrangement between them, but it was a "birdiola."

HAT approximately $700,000,000 is required by the public utility companies of the country to provide service for an additional million inhabitants, is one of the interesting facts brought forth in the recently published report of Senator Willard M. Calder's Committee on Reconstruction and Production. After a searching inquiry into the various conditions bearing upon the housing situation and the country's industrial production, the Committee finds that the business of public utilities has outgrown their plant facilities owing to the inability of the companies to finance improvements and additions necessary to take care of the increased service demands. "Prior to the war," states the Committee, "it is estimated that the normal annual requirements of electric railway, gas, and electric light and power companies for extensions, betterments, and improvements was about $500,000,000, proportioned as follows: Electric railways, $250,000,000; gas companies, $125,000,000; electric light and power companies $125,000,000. The Committee has been informed that for four years not over 40 per cent of such betterments has been made, leaving an accumulation of about $1,200,000,000. If this sum is added to $700,000,000 required alone for new residential buildings held in abeyance, a total of approximately $2,000,000,000 seems necessary for the public utility program in the immediate future. "The question of placing these businesses on a sound financial basis in order that credit may flow to them is the same question which confronts steam railroads and housing, but in the case of public utilities the case is more difficult because there is no central body as now provided in the case of steam railroads which might adjust rates in proper relation to operating costs and capital investment. The utilities likewise suffer in their effort to secure new capital for necessary extensions of service by the almost insurmountable difficulty of having to compete for such capital with municipal, state and similar tax-exempt securities. Until these problems are solved the public should recognize this underlying reason for much of the faulty service and for the failure to provide the additional facilities urgently demanded to meet community needs.—Paid Advertisement.
