WHEN DICKENS ATE 'POSSUM

English Author and Washington Irving Dined With Webster in the National Capital.

"I have, sir, just purchased in the market a famous opossum"—so wrote Webster to Irving and the latter's guest, Dickens, in March, 1842—"and I have sent it home to Monica, my cook, who will stuff it with chestnuts and bake it with sweet potatoes in true Virginia style. It will be, sir, a dish fit for the gods. Come, with your friend, and partake."

Dickens and Irving did partake in Webster's house, on Connecticut avenue, Washington, and Dickens did not relish the 'possum as much as he relished Webster's company. In a paper on literary aspects of the capital in the Catholic World Margaret B. Downing recalls another British visitor's introduction to a new dainty in Washington. Thackeray, in 1851, ate his first ice cream with Irving at the home of Hamilton Fish, on H street. Not many people realize that Irving lived for nearly five years in Washington. Of course, every one knows that George Bancroft long lived there, and that Whitman and Burroughs were in the civil service during the same Civil war years. Probably most people know also that Mrs. Stowe resided in Washington while "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was appearing in the National Era. Charles Warren Stoddard, the author of the "South Sea Idylls," also lived in Washington for a time. But no city really has title to an author until he not only lives in it, but writes about it. The author of this paper omits all mention of Henry Adams and the most notable novel of Washington life, "Democracy."—New York Evening Post.

BEN CLARK, WHOM THE INDIANS CALLED "MI-E NO-TO-WAH."

When General Custer's Fighting Seventh charged down upon Chief Black Kettle's Cheyennes on the Washita to the tune of "Garryowen" that cold November morning in 1868, at his side rode a man whom the Indians recognized, and they shouted to each other "Look out for Red Neck! He's a dead shot!"

Clark played an important part in Custer's campaigns that year, but his most valuable services were performed as a scout for Gen. Nelson Miles in the war with the Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Comanches and Kiowas in 1874. His greatest feat was his part in the rescue of the Germaline sisters, two little white girls who had been captured when their parents were murdered by raiding Cheyennes in their Kansas home.

Two of the girls, Adelade and Julia Germaline, were recaptured from the Cheyennes when Lieut. Frank Baldwin struck the camp of Chief Gray Beard so suddenly that the Indians had no chance to kill their prisoners, as they usually did. The girls informed General Miles that two of their sisters, Catherine and Sophia Germaline, still were held by another band of the Cheyennes.

Ben Clark immediately set out to discover where they were. After a long search he found that they were in the camp of Chief Stone Calf. General Miles secured a photograph of Julia and Adelade and on the back of it he wrote a message to the other sisters telling them that every effort was being made to rescue them. He gave this message to a friendly Indian who visited Stone Calf's camp and, unobserved by the Indians, slipped it into the hand of one of the girls.

The general next sent a message to Stone Calf, demanding his surrender and telling him that no mercy would be shown his warriors unless the Germaline girls were brought to the nearest army post alive and unharmed. In a short time Stone Calf came in to the Cheyenne agency, surrendered his white captives and all four sisters were reunited. Ben Clark's scouting had not been in vain.

When the Cheyennes were finally subdued, Clark settled down at Fort Reno, Okla., with them. He became their interpreter in all their dealings with the white men, and the Cheyennes came to honor "Red Neck" as much as they had feared him when he was fighting against them. Later he was custodian of old Fort Reno, and when he died a few years ago, after more than 30 years in the government service, his passing was mourned by white and red men alike.

ARE THEY?

The office was alive with noises. A messenger whistled, typewriters clicked, an adding machine buzzed, a multigraph thumped. It would seem to a mere outsider that amid all this speed and activity there would be no room for anyone so distracting as Dame Gossip or no time to listen to her stories in case she could force her way in.

Yet if this outsider had supernatural ears, he might have heard one stenographer buzzing to another. "And just before he has to leave for South America! What a shame!" Or, if his powers of observation had been acute, he might have noticed that the messenger had stopped whistling long enough to listen to a new development in the story, such as "He has been working for six months for his appointment so that they could go to South America for their honeymoon." If a mind reader, he might perhaps have noted a pang of envy flashing through the mind of a plain-looking stenographer in an obscure corner of the room. Perhaps she was thinking, "Any girl with a bunch of curls and baby-vampire eyes can treat a man as she pleases."

His curiosity as to the victims of these little snatches of gossip might have induced the outsider to go to the root of the trouble. If so, his investigations would eventually have led him to a dilapidated old boarding house, the home of one Genevieve West.

A small, blue-eyed girl sat in front of a mirror deftly plucking some curls back in shining waves over a large protruding ear. Having accomplished this to her private satisfaction she turned her head, carefully avoiding a prominent flaw in the mirror, and proceeded to cover up the other ear, equally large and equally protruding. Three floors below in the boarding house parlor sat Lyman McCullough, a clean-cut young Scotchman, characterized mainly by a rather square jaw, but with a pleasing face for all that. His Scotch jaw for once was serving him well for, in a position where most men would have given up in despair, he was able to hold on with a stubborn persistence which would excite envy from the most tenacious bulldogs.

Curiously well aroused now, the outsider would probably have followed the couple as they strolled through the Boston common, and he might even have eavesdropped a little to their conversation as they sat on a bench beneath the sheltering shade of a large tree.

Lyman was arguing. "Genevieve, if you love me as you say you do, you will marry me tomorrow and go to South America."

While Genevieve was persisting with much determination. "You know I love you, Lyman, but I can't marry you tomorrow. I can't."

Falteringly she added, "I'll wait for you."

Lyman exploded. "Wait for me! Why do you suppose I took this position? For the privilege of traveling alone?"

Calming down a little, he asked her patiently for the hundredth or perhaps the thousandth time, "Why, why can't you marry me tomorrow? We were planning to be married next month, anyhow."

And for the hundredth or perhaps the thousandth time, Genevieve answered, "I can't, Lyman, I just can't."

Lyman changed his tactics and resorted to coaxing. "Come, Genevieve, please tell me what is troubling my pretty curly-headed girl."

Genevieve sighed. "I'm not."

"Not what?" asked Lyman. "Not what you think I am," answered Genevieve.

Lyman looked puzzled and then laughed. "What are you then, sweetheart?"

Genevieve shook her head with a decided negative, but did not answer his question.

"How soon will you marry me if I give up the trip?"

Genevieve counted on her fingers. "A week from Thursday. Oh, Lyman, will you? Can you?"

But Lyman, too, was counting on his fingers. "Aha!" he detected. "I have a clue. Thursday! Pay day! Money!"

But Genevieve refused. "I couldn't take your money. We aren't married."

"Very easy," remedied Lyman. "We'll get married now and I'll give you the money."

When Genevieve refused, Lyman lost his patience and left her. The outsider would probably have been losing his patience, too, by this time and be relieved to see Genevieve shedding tears, which is a sure sign that a woman is about to tell what is troubling her.

She called to Lyman and he turned to her roughly. "Look here, Genevieve, you're going to tell me this minute why you want that money."

Genevieve crumpled into a pathetic little heap beside him and gulped her explanation.

"It's for a p-permanent wave. I know you would divorce me if you saw my hair on e-c-curters."

Lyman's relieved laugh rang through the common, but if the outsider had been there he would probably have strolled away, saying disgustedly: "Aren't girls fools?"

Submarine a Weapon Deserving Serious Consideration and Development. By EDWIN DENBY, U. S. Secretary of the Navy

Our navy today is seriously lacking in recently developed types of submarines. We have no mine laying submarines, no fleet submarines, except the three V boats now under construction; no submarines with large caliber guns, such as the British M class, and, what is more important, no long radius cruiser submarines. It is considered highly important to the national defense of this country to construct at least three each of these types for experimental and development purposes, so that in event of a national emergency we will be in a position to continue the construction of the types most necessary. The present submarine force of the navy consists of 142 submarines of all types and ages, including those authorized but still under construction. Of these there are at present 101 submarines in commission and 41 under construction. After careful consideration I have reached the conclusion that the submarine is a weapon deserving of serious consideration and development.
