KILKENNY'S VISION

Kilkenny had a vision, as he stood gazing at the skies, saw the past and future there revealed before his very eyes. Saw the hilltops and the valleys; saw the rivers and the lakes, saw the sheep and saw the shepherds, but didn't see any snakes.

Kilkenny's heart was softened, he thinks he offered up a prayer. Can it be Oh Lord, that only shepherds can enter there? Yes, other sheep have I but not of this fold, not of this selection; They shall come forth in their order, but not at the first resurrection.

Remember the story of Lazarus, do not mistake it for a fable, Who plead for the crumbs as they were dropped from the rich man's table, In their time they wined and dined and boasted of their Packard and Pierce,

While the old time Lizzies the shepherds used, they were something fierce. Kilkenny's eyes glanced upwards; the skies, not John's, were full; With fleeces as white as snowflakes, labeled "Thirty Cent Virgin Wool," While back on earth were piles of wool, still in the original bags, Lying unmolested while the mills were using rags.

Then John saw living creatures, clothed in rags, but likened unto men. They were the multitudes; the manufacturers had made monkeys of them. They had bought the press and papers, and with Congress had the pull. And no one denied the story about the four billion pounds of wool.

Four billion pounds of wool, or rather a six years supply of hand, Has proved to be a mirage of the desert, only a reflection on the sand. Or a reflection on the last administration, with the farmers in full retreat. And no one to uphold Wilson but Tumulty, since Harding took his seat.

Four billion pounds of wool! No wonder it made the shepherds stammer, To see the gatherings of a lifetime confiscated, and sold, yes, under the hammer; Or to view our sheep's long procession as they emerge from the shute, sides blood rare, Caused by the Columbia Basin's counting; counting in here and counting out there.

Four billion pounds of wool! With only one sheep to take the place of two. And life's necessities climbing, with interest and taxes due, With city, county and government officials to support on every hand— No wonder our sheep are mortgaged and carry the Columbia Basin brand.

Columbia Basin! That stands for good and evil, in this fair land of ours. And while we were having troubles, they were not picking flowers, Though we had our contentions as to who should lead the bell weather. But no contention that if the boat sank we all would sink together.

The war clouds lifted as in a night and found us fast asleep. Our securities reduced to a minimum, the Federal Reserve sounding retreat.

When I say all, I speak of the blood and sinew of our nation, not the drone, Who saps the life blood of the soil, like a cancer of the flesh and bone.

John saw the farmer at the ebb tide of his lifelong fortune's hour, And the flood tide, the entering in of him as a political power, Saw the producers, the workers, united, standing as on a rock, Backed by the best men of our nation, united in a farmer's bloc.

The farmers bloc is recognized in heaven, of this John is quite sure, For he saw labeled in gilt and golden letters, "Haggenberth, Gooding, McClure."

The profiteers had no reservations, the manufacturers, they were broke, And their holdings of a lifetime were going up in smoke.

I saw many of the old time shepherds, friends of bygone days, Playing on the golden harp and enjoying life in promiscuous ways. So from what I know on earth, and saw in heaven, I have made up my mind.

That when the reservations are opened the shepherds will not be behind.

A SHEEPMAN.

Arthur Harlow, who is engaged in the cattle business near Monument, came in Sunday evening and is spending a few days in town. He came across the mountain horseback and says there is from two to four feet of snow. Mr. Harlow says the people of his district will soon all be going to Condon, when the John Day highway is completed that while they are naturally tributary to Heppner and prefer to come here, that this town was too slow in providing decent roads for them to travel over in coming here. The proposed road to Spray will help some, Mr. Harlow says, but already much of the business that rightfully belongs to Heppner has been diverted to the Gilliam county town.

Don Case, Raymond Ferguson, Mrs. Clabaugh, Alma Devin and Bernice Woodson returned last Tuesday from Salem where they attended the state conference of the Christian Endeavor society. The delegates spent a couple of days in Portland on the return trip.

E. M. Hulden came out from Portland Friday evening after spending a few weeks in the city to start up spring work on his Blackhorse ranch. He was somewhat disappointed to find the ground still frozen and winter holding sway but says you can always find plenty to do on a ranch even in the winter. Mr. Hulden is enthusiastic over the bright outlook for Morrow county with the prices of wheat and wool soaring and thinks the price of wheat lands are none too high here. Mrs. Hulden and the children will arrive in about a week or so, as soon as E. M. gets the chill driven from the house and things generally made ready for their comfort.

C. S. Reeves, photographer of Hood River, arrived in Heppner Saturday evening to take the pictures for the Hebisch, the local high school annual. IONE HIGH SCHOOL WINS 28-26

Coach Heard's basketball quintet took their first defeat at Ione Friday night when that high school team chalked up 28 points while the Heppner boys were only able to score 26.

From all reports the game was won on fouls when Linn converted nine free throws out of ten opportunities. While Heppner's form was just the reverse as they converted one basket out of numerous free throws.

McDuffee, Heppner's star forward, had an "off night" which tended a great deal to weaken their scoring machine.

The high school boys will journey to Lexington Saturday evening to play that team a return game.
