MOSQUITOS IN JANUARY
We have all been told many times that there are no snakes in Iceland. Likewise we have mostly been under the impression that there are no mosquitos running around loose in Heppner during the winter months.

The other evening, in Gonty's the talk drifted around from snow storms to the swatting of flies and then, naturally the mosquito question came up. It was then Joe told his story: "I was helping cut ice up on Cowin's pond one time," he commented, "and as soon as we would lift a cake of ice from the pond a flock of fine, big mosquitos would fly out of the water and float around on the zero zephyr."

"Were they real mosquitos?" asked Gonty, interested.
"Sure they were real mosquitos," replied Joe, "just the same as you see flying around in July and August only that they did not have their biters on."
