Tuesday, April 3, 1923

(Continued from page three) most unepiscopal pace down the back cer gift of attraction. drive.

When it was out of sight, Billy walked very slowly to his quarters over the garage.

CHAPTER XXVII

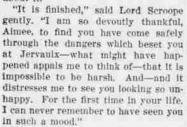

"We won't scold her any more today, Tony dear," said Lady Scroope, with the daintiest note of pleading in her volce, "will we?. This extremely naughty child. She has had a rough time."

"Yes," said Lord Scroope, heavily, "that is what I feel, Delicia. We-we must temper justice with morey." Aimee sat between her two stern parents on the lounge in the library at Scroope Towers. A night's rest had not restored the color to her cheeks. Her eyelashes were slightly wet, She smiled faintly.

"You dear people," said Aimee, stealing a hand into her mother's, while the other clasped the long white fingers of her sire, "you haven't scolded me at all. What you ought to do is to beat me. It's no use my trying to tell you how sorry 1 am. There aren't any words for It."

"Almee dear," said Lady Scroope, stroking her hair, "try and look a little less tragic, This isn't like you. It's all over now.

"Is it?" said Aimee wistfully. "I am glad, mummle. I've told you both the story, all over and over. I've tried to make it clear. It's a fearful tangle, I know. You have both been so sweet about it."

Aimee stood up.

"The thing I want to know," she said, plteously, "is, what about Billy? You won't answer me. Mummie, you, I know, will understand. If I lose Billy, Ldon't care whether I live or die. That is all." Lord Scroope passed his fingers through his snowy hair. Aimee's mother put an arm round her and led her out of the room. "Go upstairs and rest for awhile, Baby," said Lady Scroope, gently, "You are very tired, and there has been talk enough." In a few minutes Lady Scroope returned.

"This," sold her husband, sadly, "Is the most distressing aspect of the whole affair."

"I had a long talk with Almee this morning," said Lady Scroope, "and it isn't a thing we can dismiss lightly, Tony. I know the child better than you do." She reflected, "This Bilthis Mr. Spencer appears to be rather remarkable."

"If we can trust Aimee's account," said Lord Scroope gloomily, "But-a young man picked up by the wayside,' he added with a bewildered air. "My dear Delicia-1

"He is not English, is he?"

"American, I understand, It seems curious," said Lord Scroope, pensively, "but I believe he is the first American I have met."

His wife laid a small white hand on his shoulder.

"Tony, darling," she said laughing, ington; there was also something re-,touched the peak of his cap. He markably likable about him. He apwatched the automobile disappear at a opeared to have very strongly the Spen-

"Will you be seated, Mr. Rivington. I will give my attention to what you have to say."

Mr. Rivington twinkled again, then became grave. "I should have thought," he said, subsiding gently into an old bergere chair, "that it was enough for anyone to meet William to size him up. However, he is the son of my only sister, and of the late Lindon Spencer of Denver. Who was, on the whole, the finest man I ever knew in the course of a life that has been described as varied and comprehensive. And Billy is as good as his father. I wish you had met Lin-dop." 'I appreciate what you say," replied Lord Scrope, "I do not gather, however, what Mr. Spencer's occupation

18. "He has developed himself as a motor engineer.

"I know so little of mechanics-" be gan Lord Scroope,

"Mechanics," said Mr. Rivington, smilling, "are, of course, a matter of They have an interest for me," taste. A light dawned suddenly on Lord

Scroope. "Is it possible," he said, "that you are the-the nuthor as it were-of the Rivington motorcar?"

"That among other things," said the visitor pleasantly.

Lord Scroope looked bewildered. It was not possible, however ignorant one might be of mechanics, not to have heard of the Rivington automobile. Nor, however casual a reader of the secular press, could one avoid the echoes of the fame of that solid maniphtm. ulator of millions, that human comet of progress, Hiram B. Rivington. The name on the pasteboard had not till now connected with Lord Scroope's mind.

He contemplated Mr. Rivington with wondering interest. "Mr. Spencer," he said, "is indeed fortunate in his uncle."

"I would rather say that I'm fortunate in my nephew," replied Rivington. "Billy doesn't need an uncle. In my country we haven't much use for a young man whose only assets are his relatives. Billy has made good by his own efforts, sir. He is the inventor and proprietor of the Flying Sphinx motorcycle."

"An experimental machine, I understand. I hope, for Mr. Spencer's sake,' said Lord Scroope, politely, "that it may prove-ab-successful."

Mr. Rivington smiled.

"The present model of the Sphinx, though a big advance on the others, is past the experimental stage. Of the first and second models, a quarter of a million have been sold in the States. The plant for the latest, on mass production, is now being hild down. In the company that's being floated I hold a third control-and I'm very thankful that I have. Billy stands to clean up three hundred and fifty thousand dollars on the deal-hard earnings." "I have not a very good head for figures, Mr. Rivington. Could you translate that into terms of English currency ?"

"About seventy thousand pounds." Lord Scroope sat perfectly silent, gazing at Mr. Rivington.

"But the youngster himself is what I'm concerned with-not what he's got. However," continued Rivington, look ing out of the window as a faint whirring noise was heard below, "I see he's arrived, so I needn't say any more But I'm very glad to have had this sumed their conversation and drifted out through the windows to the lawn near the entrance, where stood the Sphinx. The original Sphinx, with pillion-seat de luxe attached.

Ten minutes later Lord Scroope, with a countenance that was positively animated, came toward them across the grass,

"My dear Delicia !" he exclaimed, "I have no objection to saying, even before Mr. Rivington, that William Spencer is a most remarkable young man. Not only has his conduct all through the affair been admirable, but his character appeals to me very greatly. There is more innate honesty, more of the very essence of religion, in that young fellow, than I have yet encountered in anyone of his age."

Mr. Rivington, coloring still more deeply, looked at his lordship with appreclative eyes. Lady Scroope smiled.

"Tony, dear, I have seldom heard you express yourself so warmly; and as a judge of character you have taught us to regard you as infallible. Certainly, from the rather brief interview I had with Mr. Spencer I formed a similar opinion. But do I understand that you have ?"

"Hem," said Lord Scroope, with some slight confusion, "we appear to be moving rather-nh-rapidly. I feel-" He broke off, apparently at a loss, as Billy and Aimee came towards them across the lawn, side by side. There was something Olympian in Billy's as pect and the splendor of his smile. Almee was radiant and glowing. Lord Scroope scarcely recognized in her the pallid and distressed young woman who had returned from Jervaulx. It was as though an errant descendant of the gods had restored his daughter to

"Dad!" said Aimee. "You've been splendid, dear. And I want to say all the nice things to Billy's uncle, that I haven't had a chance to, yet."

.

"I hope," said Lord Scroope, wrinkling his brow is perplexity as he and his wife stood in the library some hours later, after the departure of the visitors, "that I have not been too precipitate. Have I committed myself too far, Delicia?"

Lady Scroope pushed her husband gently into an armchair and perched herself on the arm of it.

"If you mean, dear," she said, stroking his bair, "did you definitely accept Billy Spencer as a prospective son-in-law-you certainly did. And a very good thing, too,"

"Did 1 really?" murmured her husband. "I hardly recognize myself today, Delicia. It seems very precipitute. There are so many things to consider-to verify-"

"I haven't the slightest doubt that will be all right. Two of the soundest people I ever came across."

"But what-" "What I like about Americans," said Lady Scroope, "when a propositionthat's what they call it. I think-when a proposition is clear, they don't waste time. I like people who don't waste time-it makes life so much less complicated." "I am certainly conscious of a great access of happiness."

"Yes. Because Aimee is so happy And Almee's happiness is a very infec tious quality. Still, at the moment Tony dear, you are looking a little worried and anxious. Why?"

"The one rift in the lute," said Lord Scroope regretfully, "is this break with the Jervaulx household. Family quarrels are always petty and undly nified. I fear the affair has allenated Erythea. I hope I did not conv impression that I disapproved of Alexander's marriage. Really it is an excellent thing for Georgins, and he will have a most worthy wife."

THE HEPPNER HERALD, HEPPNER, OREGON

after the wedding breakfast, the car rlage with the two fat horses will be walting for you; it will convey you to the train, and then away for-where did you say you were going?"

"Closeminster," said Georgina rapturously. "Alexander is to be inducted as assistant to the prebendary in six weeks time. I was so glad when he suggested we should go at once to the place where later his duties will He. There, under the shadow of that glorious old enthedral-"

"You'll spend an idyllic, sedate honeymoon," said Aimee. "How perfect, dear. Aren't you grateful to me? If It badn't been for my stunt, you might have missed a whole life's happiness. But Billy and I-"

"You're going through to Harwich on the car, aren't you, dear? Alexander told me-"There's Aunt Erythea!" said Al-"I'm glad mummie induced the old terror to come."

"Who is that with her?" "My new uncle-in-law, Mr. Rivington: He's a peach ! Aunt seems to be getting on with him splendidly. Look at her back! Who's the funny little man that seems half asleep, over by the cedar?" "My Uncle Joseph," murmured Georgina. "He didn't realize till after we left Jervaulx, that I ought to have been at home with him all the time. I don't think he really grasps the position, even now," "I don't wonder. These professors never do grasp anything," chuckled Aimee. "We've beaten Diana and Bertrand. They're to be married in London next week."

"Isn'i all this delightful to think of," sighed Georgina, "after the horrors we went through ! Did you ever hear what became of that woman you told me about-the wife of the burglar?"

"Never heard a word more of her I think she got away.' "It all seems like some fearful night mare now," shuddered her cousin. "As the wife of a future bishop you'll wipe it off your memory, Geor gie, dear. But I never shall! Th greatest time I ever had in my life The Joy of living, Georgie !" Lady Scroope suddenly entered the room. "Children," she said gravely, "in fiv minutes we start for the chapel."

Aimee bolted into her room, followed by her mother,

"Do you see 'em yet?" whispered an apple-checked woman engerly. The red popples in her bonnet quivered as she raised herself on tiptoe. The staff of the Scroope Towers household was grouped on either side of the great porch, behind the assembled guests, The apple-cheeked woman was Mrs. Sunning of Ivy cottage, Stanhoe; the only envoy from the Jervauly district. Her eyes sparkled, she clutched grimly to her breast a large bag of rice. a barbarous custom still permitted at Scroope.

Almee and Billy suddenly emerged from the porch at speed, followed closely by Alexander and Georgina. amid cheers, flower-petals and confetti. Mrs. Sunning, with a shrill cry, opened her batteries.

Alexander and Georgina, swerving to the right, climbed into the walting carriage. Billy, escaping through the shower of rice, shot past to the car.

"Beat it !" he cried to the chauffeur, and caught Aimee by the hand. Together they scudded on foot down the drive

The guests paused in astonishment. Lady Scroope, her eyelashes sparkling, laughed gently. Aunt Erythea jutted an inquiring nose round the pillars.

The bride and bridegroom, having made good speed for two hundred yards, turned into a clump of laurels that efficiently hid the Flying Sphinx. Billy snatched up a blue cloak that lay athwart the saddle.

"On with it !" cried Billy, glowing, In a twinkling Aimee donned the wrap; as Billy bestrode the saddle she threw herself upon the pillion and her arms about his walst.

"Ready-pariner !" Billy said. "Let her rip!" panted Almee joy ousiv.

The Sphinx hummed swiftly along the park road and swung left onto the highway.

"Hold tight!" The Sphinx breasted the long rise at sixty miles an hour. The wind screamed past them. Aimee laughed aloud. Leaning for ward from the pillion, she pressed the smallest, soft round kiss on the back of Billy's neck, as they disappeared in a cloud of sunlit dust [THE END]

PAGE FIVE

1 BOARDMAN

Mrs. Beek is visiting this week in The Dalles with her daughter and new grandson.

Ray, Glen and Ernest Brown and airs. Cahoon motored to Walla Walla Saturday to visit their father who is suffering from injuries causod by a horse kicking him.

F. G. McMurray, of Yakima, Wash., was aguest at the Highway Inn Friday and Saturday or last week. Mr. McMurray is an old friend of the Warner family.

Mrs. Spring, accompanied by her daughter-in-law and grand-daughter motored up from Portland on Monday of last week. Mrs. Spring remained for an indefinite visit with her daughter, Mrs. Nick Faler.

Business visitors in town last week were Jacob Marty and son of Portland, Mr Morty was here in the nterest of establishing a cheese factory, and will return later to make more definite arrangements.

The Oscar Beck family moved into the M. B. Signs residence hist Wednesday.

Mrs. Ray Brown and daughter, Katherine, visited in Walla Walla a few days last week.

Christian Endeavor on Saturday evening was greatly enjoyed by the large crowd present. Visits were made to Holland, Japan, Africa, ments typical of each country were served. After each one had found his or her way back to the auditorium a fine program was rendered. The Oriental dance by the sheik's harem was most effective and the participants deserve praise for their interpretation. No less pleasing was the Rose drill and the several vocal and instrumental numbers. We have cause to be proud of the leaders of such an entertainment for they have discovered hitherto unknown talent in our community.

In honor of their fifth wedding anniversary was the dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. A. T Hereim Sunday, The following guests were present. Mr. and Mrs. Nick Falor, Mrs. Spring and Mr and Mrs. Jack Gorham

The dance given as a benefit to the Heppner ball team Saturday night was well attended, well conducted and a big success, netting the team about $45.

the wor one thing at least you know. You saw this man. Is he-a gentleman?" Lord Scroope paused.

"Whatever else he may not be, he is that."

"I rather gathered it from what I heard of him.

"But Dellein-"

The butler entered with a card on a tray. Lord Scroope inspected the card. It here the name "Hiram B. Rivington," which conveyed nothing to Lord Scroope Under It, in pencil, were the words, "About Mr. William Spencer," "Is the bearer of this below?" asked Lord Scroope.

"Yes, m' lord. He wishes to see your lordship urgently.

Lady Scroope gianced at the card, and suppressed her curiosity nobly.

"I shall leave you to receive this visitor, Tony," she said. "I do not think Aimee ought to be left alone just now."

She retired. A very large, cleanshaven man with a rectangular jaw and thin, humorous lips, was ushered into the library. He was attired in roomy gray tweeds, his eye twinkled faintly, and there was something compelling about his presence.

"Lord Scroope?" he inquired, bowing courteously. "It's very good of you to receive a stranger. I thought that my nephew, William Spencer, would be here. He promised me to arrive anew. now. I guess it's something big that's delayed him."

"Is Mr. Spencer your nephew?" said Lord Scroope guardedly.

"That is so. You know him, I think."

"It is hardly the word. I know less than nothing of him. Mr. Rivington."

"Correct. He feels, and so do I, that a proper explanation is due to you, Lord Scroope. I don't know the whole story, but dircumstances have impelled William, by no choice of his own, to break into the society of Eastshire county in a way that would probably be called unusual down here. He came to London and consulted me last night. He was very much distressed-which isn't usual with him. It's only fair to William that his credentials should be presented, and I think I'm the man to do it. I should like, Lord Scroope, to tell about Billy."

Lord Scroope stiffened. But there was an uncommon dignity in Mr. Rivance to speak for him. Billy Isn't good at praising himself."

Billy's card cume up, and Billy shortly followed it. He looked at Lord Scroope diffidently,

"I shall be glad to have a few words with you, Mr. Spencer," said Lord Scroope with his most amhable air. there was a staccate quality about our first meeting, that rendered a mutual understanding difficult."

"The first duty of an uncle," sold Mr. Rivington, is to realize when he's in With your permission, Lord the way. Scroope, I'll go below.

He retired, leaving the two together, and drifted into the summy morning room overlooking the lawn. In a few moments Lady Scroope came in. Mr Rivington made himself known to her, In a very short time Lady Scroope had skillfully elicited from Mr. Rivington all the information he had given to her husband, and a good deal more. She bubbled with amusement and sympathy as the enthusiastic Rivington expounded Billy's qualities.

"I had a few words with your nephew, Mr. Rivington, before he went upstairs," she said laughing, "a most magnetic and alluring young man. 1 tremble to think what his influence may be on my simple-minded husband."

Mr. Rivington, coloring with pleasure, looked admiringly at the little lady, wondering how she came to have a daughter as old as Aimee-who at that moment entered the room. Lady Scroope introduced her guest.

"Well !" murmured Mr. Rivington. holding Aimee's hand after shaking it and regarding her vivid beauty with the most intense appreciation, "I can understand Billy's anxiety now. "Do you mean to say," exclaimer

Aimee, "that Billy is here?" "He is at present with your father in the library, dear," replied her mother, Aimee departed hustily,

"Aimeo," her mother called after her, you are on no account to interrupt them

Tm going to be there when they come out !" said Aimee over her shoulder as she disappeared.

The two elder people looked at enen other, and both of them laughed. Mr. Rivington was charmed. Lady Scroops was wholly unlike his preconceived notions of an English peeress. They re-

"I," suld Lady Scroope, kissing the top of his head, "will make the peace with Erythea, Although she disapproves of my moral character, I am the only person she really listens to. I will go over tomorrow and pave the way. Two already talked that over with Mr. William Spencer," she added. twinkling, "and he will accompany me I am persuaded he has great influence there. I suggest a double wedding here at Scroope. It will suit Erythea much better than at Jervaulx-as things are! Have no fear, Tony. It shall be arranged."

CHAPTER XXVIII

"All's Well-"

"What," said Aimee, with a little touch of scorn, "are you looking so frightened about, Georgie denr?" "I'm n-not frightened," said Georgina faintly, smoothing her white slik sleeve with a tremulous hand and glancing at the spray of orange-blossoms on the boudoir table. "I'm supremely happy. But-one ought to feel a little frightened, surely? Are not you?'

"Not a bit."

Georgina regarded her consin with a faintly shocked expression, that changed slowly into a gaze of admiration.

perfectly lovely you look, "How Aimee !

"Yes, don't I," returned Aimee simply, inspecting herself in the long mirror. "Isn't Billy lucky!" She suddenly encircled Georgina's waist with her arm. "I'm so glad you're happy, Georgie dear. Everybody's got to be happy today; even Aunt Erythes. In half an hour you and Alexander will stand at the altar. Don't tremble like that. I and Billy will be close to you. Dad will marry all four of us with splendid composure and dignity There's nothing to be afraid of. Lund is at his best in emergencies like that." "I do love dignity," said Georgina gratefully.

"Don't say nasty things to me on my wedding day. You'll get all the dignity you want. When you emerge

Perfect Meal

The End of a

Never overlook the prime requisite to perfect peace of mind and calmness of thought -by omitting the after-dinner coffee,

"The Cup That Calms and Pacifies"

Don't unnecessarily take the joy from a perfect meal for most red-blooded Americans. We keep the best-

Folgers - Golden West Schillings - Wason

Phelps Grocery Company