Warship Still Backbone of U. S. Navy

FLOATING ships will continue the backbone of the United States navy and the airplane will serve as an adjunct, not as a substitute, for the dreadnaught. This is indicated finally by a series of statements issued semi-officially by the Navy News Service, forecasting with certainty the findings of the general board. The statements include opinions from Secretary Denby, Assistant Secretary Roosevelt and Admirals Coots, Rodgers and Moffett. The general board, after weeks of research, will recommend that congress be asked to appropriate funds for building not less than twelve and not more than twenty in each type of 10,000-ton cruisers, mine-laying and scout submarines and six gunboats, next session.

The summary of the general board as to its findings of the importance of aircraft has not been made public, but aviation enthusiasts who believe that the airplane has eclipsed the battleship will find the deathknell of immediate hopes in Secretary Denby's sentence that "the battleship is still the strongest element in the nation's sea defense and will be so long as most of us now living are concerned with mundane affairs."

The general board has been conducting an exhaustive research into the merits of various types of fighting weapons, and has sought opinions from officers of every school, from the old bitter-enders who believe that weight and metal is the cardinal factor in seafighting to the extremists who would carry the fleet into the air. Summed up by opinions issued in the Navy News manifesto, the board believes that "aviation as a vital branch of the service cannot be pushed too strongly, but at the same time the surface fleet must be rounded out to the 5-5-3 ratio provided for by the naval treaty."

Secretary Denby points out that once the battleship is accepted as doomed by aircraft supremacy, the logical conclusion must be to scrap all ships since the floating craft must speedily be extinct. This is not true, he warns, and since the battleship is still the most powerful weapon of a fleet, the ships which float upon the sea are a nation's strongest power.

"The tremendous importance of the new weapon, the airplane, is clear," he says. "Every effort is being made to develop it and make it as effective as possible for offense and defense. The place of the airplane in armies and navies is assured and vital but the ships that float upon the sea are still the nation's strongest power."

School Days
 Which Boy Will "Bat First?"

Hello Boys!

In the old days, when your dads were boys, they played "one o'cat" or "town ball" just as you play base ball today and while the "gang" waited for the game to start your dad and some pal grabbed a bat and matched, hand over hand, to see who'd "bat first."

Which boy will "bat first" in the game of life after school days are over? It will be the boy who, even in his school days, had a definite object in life and pursued that object in a systematic way.

One of the most important things for the boy or girl who wants to "bat first" is to start a Savings Account at the Bank--acquire habits of thrift and system.

Our Savings Department is designed to help every Morrow County child to be a "first batter" in later life.

If you want to start life on a foundation of Thrift, with Ultimate Success the goal, come in and let us explain our Savings Account System. It will pay you.
