

Hydrolyzed sawdust, a by-product in the manufacture of industrial alcohol, is not a satisfactory feed for dairy cows at present prices of feeds and cost of treating sawdust, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Although this product contains a large proportion of material of no feeding value, it can be used in limited quantities for dairy cows when ordinary feeds are very high in price.

Bright Colors in Late Fall Styles

Many Costumes Carry East Indian Note; New Dress With Coat-Top.

Resplendent colors and novelty materials are a feature of the new clothes, writes a Paris fashion correspondent in the New York Tribune.

Prominent among the emphatic notes are the Hindu-Chinese effects. One needs only to study the records of the moguls to realize how closely allied are the present-day fashions to their mode of dress. In the Bibliotheque Nationale at Paris is to be found a wonderful collection of hand illuminated and hand-illustrated books, done by Italian artists, which set forth particularly the costume history of the great moguls. The house of Agnes shows in replica many points of the picturesque dress of these people.

One recalls that just prior to the great war Paris fashions went through a period of minaret styles and these Hindu-Chinese effects are from the same source. But in the present-day interpretations fashion has escaped the minaret skirt and it is the coat, or polonaise, that has been adapted—the flaring bell-shaped postilion or basque set onto a close-fitting, long-waisted body. Thus it is the masculine Mogul style that Paris is exploiting for autumn—the coat of the Grand Mogul himself, and not those of the women of his harem.

Any number of costumes bear this East Indian note. At first sight it seems as if it were a two-piece garment, that there was a narrow foundation and over this a flaring coat of three-quarters length. But the new feature is really a dress with a coat-top and not a two-piece costume. In a clever manner the flaring tunic and the narrow skirt are attached and one is a complementary part of the other, though they may differ both in color and in material.

Sumptuous fabrics are employed for these modes. Or if the fabric is plain it is a brilliant color and often marvelously embroidered and jeweled.

Developed From White Velvet.

One of the most interesting dresses of this sort is a model called Pagode. It is developed from white velvet richly embroidered from white velvet richly embroidered in gold and in black silk. At the edge of the three-quarters length sleeves and the godet tunic is a band of black velvet, and bordering all is a deep band of dark brown fur.

This model is almost exactly like the coats worn by titled rulers during the period of the Grand Moguls. The body is straight and close-fitting, with a low waistline and three-quarters tunic flaring widely over a very narrow foundation. The sleeves are long and bell shaped and the neck is collarless. There is an opening down the front of the blouse characteristic of the Oriental garment which slips on over the head.

Another beautiful Hindu model is Korigane. It is developed in red velvet with gold embroidery in an elaborate all-over pattern with deep borders of fur. This silhouette is exactly the same as that of Pagode.

Separate coats are cut on these same flaring lines. Many of them are made of the new woolen and metal Smyrna cloths which bid fair to be immensely popular this winter, replacing to no small extent the elaborately embroidered coatings of the last season.

The Smyrnas are an important group. They are what is known in the trade as the carpet weave, being woven with a looped surface either in an all-over effect or in a brocade or plaided pattern. One lovely design shows a sort of Japanese landscape effect in raised loop pattern on a background of contrasting color. Another Smyrna novelty in plaid pattern imitates in coloring and design the famous clan tartans of Scotland. A third type is a Smyrna brocade, the design of which suggests the foliage of the jungle.

Imitate Hand-Loom Shawls. Cashmere patterns, which imitate perfectly old-fashioned hand-loom shawls, are shown in a beautiful series

The Arlington velvet bean developed by the United States Department of Agriculture is a new variety which matures fully in the vicinity of Washington, D. C. It makes excellent growth and gives added vigor to corn when grown with that crop. The development of the variety should bring velvet beans into general use at least as far north as the latitude of Washington, Cincinnati, and Kansas City.

Exhibition in England of Department of Agriculture movies depicting the production and marketing of American cotton elicited much favorable comment from the cotton trade there, reports American Vice Consul James Monroe Hill. Many of the leading trade journals at Manchester and Liverpool commended the department for its educational work through the medium of the silver sheet. One newspaper said: "Extremely well produced, with an eye for the essential point to the exclusion of trivial detail, the films proved really attractive."
