AS TO CLIMATE,

Every fellow boasts that of his own locality. He has an eye out for every pleasant day and fragment of a day. If he lives near the sea shore or larger rivers, and the sun inadvertently bores a hole through the mists or fog for a few spare minutes, our local weather man is Johnny on the spot, and like a chameleon he mounts the nearest fence and proceeds to inform the whole round world of the glories of our climate, and our climate alone, calling special attention to its sunshiny character et al. If on the other hand, he lives on the arid plains where the sun is seen in all his brassy splendor for 300 days in the year, and vegetation without the aid of water brought from faraway mountains, is a minus quantity, he is ready to jump up, crack his heels together and shout with all the power of his lungs and pen the surpassing excellence of the climate.

And so it is everywhere. Backsets come to all of them at times. Storms of great or unusual violence, hurricanes, cyclones, cloud bursts, earth-quakes, etc., etc. But these all blow over and are soon but a memory, a dark day in the dim and distant past and may never happen again. "It never does in this climate, you know."

Fact is, every section of the country has its climatic peculiarities, its strong points and its weak ones, some pleasant some disagreeable. And, after all, that climate is perhaps the best that can show the greatest preponderance of good qualities, that will produce the greatest variety of vegetation in the greatest perfection, that will supply the greatest amount of personal comfort with the least expenditure of effort, and bring the largest returns in material prosperity for the means invested. By this test we are willing to back Eastern Oregon and especially Morrow county against "all out of doors."

Spokane, Wash.--Earth is being hauled from the Snake river a distance of sixty-five miles to Waukena, Wash, to make the largest railroad fill in the world. The fill will replace a Spokane, Portland & Seattle railway wooden bridge 3,000 feet long and seventy feet high, built at a cost of $150,000. It will require 530,000 cubic yards of earth and rock to fill the gap.

One steam shovel and four trains of twenty-five cars each are engaged in the work, which will cost approximately $100,000, and will consume about eight months' time. The S. P. & S. is eliminating a number of lofty wooden trestles built at great expense in order to secure an earth grade between Spokane and the coast except for the steel trestles and a few minor culverts.
