Alaska Now on Studebaker Map.

By the simple expedient of a bold, blue-penciled line, the entire territory of Alaska has been annexed to the commercial realm of the automobile. Within a short time residents of the territory will be favored with a real automobile garage and salesroom, their first intimation that even the Arctic Circle is not to remain longer without civilization's most recent development in land transportation.

The annexation was a feature of a recent gathering of Studebaker branch managers at headquarters in Detroit. It was brought about by A. H. Brown, of Portland, Ore., who has charge of the Corporation's wholesale business in the Pacific Northwest.

Mr. Brown asked authority to place a Studebaker agency with a man in Juneau who had been importuning for some time by letter and by a personal visit.

Around the territory he added the heavy line that plainly answered the whole question, placing a tract of more than 500,000 square miles under the jurisdiction of the Portland branch.

Mr. Brown emerged from the conference highly elated.

"I'm now the boss of the biggest territory in the home organization," he remarked. "It may not be famous for its asphalt and macadam but mark my words, I'll put eight or ten cars into Juneau this year and sprinkle a few more along the coast. They'll multiply as roads are built and they'll themselves be the most influential factors in speeding the time when the motor car will replace the dog train as the medium of independent transportation in Alaska."

Mr. Brown is seriously considering a trip into his new territory, during the coming summer. Some of the extreme northwest has already been penetrated by a Studebaker car which, several months ago was driven from Seattle to Hazelton, winning thereby the trophy offered by the citizens of that town for the first car to enter by the overland route. There are several cars in Hazelton now and Alaska proper probably contains as many as six or seven, maintained by private individuals and bought in 'the States.'

The Oregon City dry election has been held valid by Judge Campbell of the Circuit Court. He contends that the issue was properly and legally placed on the ballot for the consideration of the voters. The wets will make an immediate appeal to the Supreme Court.

Many friends of R. A. Booth of Eugene are urging him to enter the race for United States senator for Oregon. A formal invitation was given him by the people of Eugene last week. An announcement will come from him soon as to what action he will take. Mr. Booth is a republican.

Dried or frozen eggs will be a solution for the present high prices and cold storage corners according to Dr. Mary E. Pennington who has charge of the food research work in the department of Agriculture. Eggs in this condition will keep much longer than the cold storage eggs and at the same time will retain their nutritive value, is her contention.

Governor West has called a meeting of the State Emergency Board which takes place today, at which he will suggest that a deficiency of $50,000 be created to give employment on public roads for the next two months to men out of work. He figures that besides aiding the condition of the army of employed, it will also be a boost to Oregon's good roads policy.

Twelve persons were injured and one probably fatally last Sunday, when the northbound Santa Fe passenger limited crashed into the rear end of another north bound train 20 miles north of Fresno Calif. The injured included eight passengers and four railway employees. Three coaches were derailed. The responsibility for the accident has not yet been placed.

L. Monasterelli, who has the contract for erecting the new buildings at the state hospital, was badly injured in a runaway at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He was driving in a single rig near the hospital and his horse becoming frightened when the harness came loose, dashed away and headed straight for a telephone pole. To save himself Mr. Monasterelli jumped and in falling broke his right arm at the wrist, sprained his left arm and was badly bruised up. The injured man was temporarily cared for by the physicians at the state hospital and later in the afternoon was brought to his home here.—E. O.

Mr. Monasterelli owns business interests in this city and has many friends here who will be sorry to hear of his misfortune.

C. A. Rudell a bank bookkeeper of The Dalles has completely disappeared from that city, and his relatives and friends can find no trace of him. It is rumored that he feared arrest on the charge of embezzling funds from the Moose lodge. This rumor however has been greatly discounted by the president of the bank where Rudell worked, who states that all of Rudell's affairs are in good shape.

Rudell committed suicide in a hotel in Portland on Tuesday, going the carbolic acid route.

The Wallace Idaho post office was robbed of $17,000 on the night of December 13. As yet no clue leading to the guilty party has been found. Of the amount stolen, $15,000 was money consigned to the First National Bank of Mullan from the Old National Bank of Spokane, which was to handle the pay checks in the various mines Mullan district. It is strongly believed that the burglars had inside information of the large shipment of money, and followed it on the same train to Wallace, where they committed the theft.
