Drugless Treatment of Typhoid.

By Dr. J. Perry Conder.

[Paid Advertisement.]

The drugless physician claims and proves that normalization and stimulation of the spinal tissues can and does assist the patient's body in overcoming the effects of bacterial invasion. He stimulates the heart, as explained above, by Nature's own stimulant—the nerve—and brings in the help which the bacteriologist with sorrow deploras as non-existent. The bacteriologist is speaking honestly, and with the highest and best motives when he says that "in the battle between the germ and the body, all we can do is to watch with intense interest the ultimate outcome." Yet the bacteriologist in good time will learn that the drugless physician has found a way of taking an active part in the battle, and reinforcing the body with its own chemical troops, which, if they do not always decide the day, decide it many, many times.

All the leading medical journals, and I take several of them, have at least one good article in almost every issue of the paper on Typhoid Fever. The leading article in CLINICAL MEDICINE, with editorial note, for March, 1914, by J. M. French, M. D., contains the following: "A friend of mine, who was graduated from Harvard the year after I was from the University of Vermont, took for the subject of his graduating thesis 'Typhoid Fever;' and in discussing the treatment he wrote as follows—this sentiment, he tells us, embodying the substance of the teachings he had received on this point: 'The treatment of typhoid fever is devoted to the one end, namely, to keep up the patient's strength until the disease has run its course. There is no drug which will lessen, cure or cut short the disease.' This statement has a most familiar sound and calls to mind the similar words of Osler; raising, indeed, the question as to whether Osler took his ideas from Harvard or Harvard and Osler both drank from the same fount of knowledge. Undoubtedly the statement quoted represents the consensus of medical opinion of a generation ago. As for my friend, I am glad to be able to tell you that he has entirely repudiated these ideas and advocates and practices something quite opposite to these pessimistic notions."

The harmful effect of drugs on the living body has long been known and realized by the really scientific man, such as the bacteriologist, the physiologist, the chemist and the pharmacologist. Men like these who, knowing that drugs were worse than useless, began a few years ago to investigate germ diseases with the hope of finding, in the germs themselves, some hidden cure for the diseases which the germs produced. This was the beginning of what is known as "serum therapy." It consists in the injection into the human body of the liquid part of the blood—that is, the part of the blood that remains after the clot has been removed—of an animal that has been treated with the germs which produce the special disease that it is desired to cure.

They know the limitations and the extreme dangers of the method, and have long since come to the conclusion that science must look in other directions for a rational and safe method of fighting germs in the bodies of men.

The greatest genius of experimental therapy in the world—so acclaimed at the recent International Medical Congress at London—I mean Professor Ehrlich, of Frankfort-am-Main, HAS ABANDONED SERUM WORK, regarding the field as already worked out, and is now devoting himself exclusively to the study of effects of certain chemical compounds on the germ of syphilis. Such things are highly significant.

The drugless physician, by the quick and positive results flowing from the subtle touches of his finger tips on the living body, has been and is a living and daily verifier and demonstrator of a therapeutic theory which is still twenty years in advance of ordinary medical thinking.

This, then, is the great and beautiful discovery that has been made and established as an absolute fact by the wonderful experiments of the research men in Europe. Their work has proved, once and forever, that the only cure for disease is the cure which Nature has already installed in the body. And many of the foremost leaders in this work besides Professor Ehrlich have abandoned serum therapy as a futile hope for man, while a great many others never had any faith in it at all. They are still studying the blood and its conduct under abnormal conditions. This new science is called "Experimental Pathology" and those who are working in it are in reality working along drugless lines.

Following the use of serums countless patients have been left in a deplorable condition as a result of administering these much-praised but oft-failing "cures" and have sought the skill of the drugless physician. For example: I have treated and cured the paralysis of many children resulting from and following the antitoxin treatment of diphtheria.

CAUSE OF INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

In the "Technical World Magazine" for January, 1913, is an account of the discovery by Dr. M. J. Rosenau, professor in Harvard University, of the cause of Infantile Paralysis. This is no new discovery to the drugless physician. I was taught this same discovery eighteen years ago in a school of Drugless Healing and have been for fifteen years treating and curing children with this terrible disease. I can point out to you any day on the streets of our city children I have cured and others I am treating for this malady which is responsible for more cripples than any other ailment.

RHEUMATISM ANOTHER GERM DISEASE.

The Medical Record for March 7, 1914, contains the announcement and review of a new book by Sir William Osler, Bart. M. D., F. R. S., Regius Professor of Medicine in Oxford University, England; Hon. Professor of Medicine in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, in which is announced the discovery of the microbe which they have called Diplococcus rheumaticus, which they claim to be the essential factor in the production of rheumatism. This places rheumatism without question in the list of germ diseases which should not be treated by the administration of drugs. Dr. Osler is assisted by at least a dozen others who are leaders in medical thought and professors in the leading universities of this country, Canada and England. Score another victory for the drugless physician.

THE CLEAR TREND OF THE HEALING ART.

What has been said in the foregoing article, brief and simple as it is, will suffice to explain why and how the drugless physician has re-written the text books of pathology, which is to say, the record and explanation of the morbid (or diseased) processes and tissues of the human body. It has ushered in both a new explanation of the causes of diseases and a new method, a new technique, of cure; and, unlike much of old-time medical speculation and practice, the drugless method is so practical and full of common sense that all persons may understand its basic principles and procedures when these are clearly outlined. The drug-system physician who treats the border line of libel, and deals in scandal and gossip concerning his competitors, is a fairly good man to let alone and my opinion is that lots of people will give him absent treatment.
