PETITION REFORM.
(Eugene Register)

The need of reform in our system of petition making is indicated by the fact that a number of measures embodying changes of procedure have been proposed. It is generally admitted that our method of making initiative and referendum petition is faulty and needs revision, but opinions differ as to the reforms that should be adopted. At least three plans, all of them differing in detail have been put forward, and it is not improbable that all three may be on the ballot this fall.

Ex-Senator Jonathan Bourne proposes to remedy the evils that have developed by abolishing the paid petition circulator, but permitting the voluntary circulation of petitions. His plan is open to the objection that it is a prohibitory measure that will not prohibit. The inhibition against receiving pay could be circumvented in many different ways, and it is probable that if his plan were adopted the abuses would not be greatly decreased.

The Lane county grange has also considered the question of petition reform, and some time ago outlined a draft of a tentative measure, whose most interesting feature was a provision requiring signatures to petitions to be obtained in a certain number of counties of the state.

Attorney-General Crawford, who is a candidate for governor, has proposed and made part of his platform the most radical measure of all. He would make it unnecessary to circulate petitions at all. According to his plan, one or more legal voters may propose any measure by petition. The petition must include the full text of the measure, and may be filed with the secretary of state with a filing fee of two hundred dollars, which is to be applied on the cost of printing and mailing election pamphlets. No change is proposed in the present method of making referendum petitions.

The trouble with the Crawford plan is that it puts the proposal of initiative measures upon a strictly cash basis—and a cash basis at that which is smaller than the present cost of circulating petitions. It gives the people no opportunity to prevent the overloading of the ballot at every election, and this measure would probabably result in increasing the number many times.

A simpler method of reforming petition abuses than any of these that have been proposed would be to abolish the paid circulator and require all petitions to be left in places where they would be adequately supervised and where they might be signed by anyone who wished to see the proposed measure voted on by the people. If this plan were followed, many useless measures would die a natural death, and those that finally were placed on the ballot would be there in response to a real demand from the people.
