CO-OPERATIVE CREAMERY, THE BED ROCK OF THE DAIRY BUSINESS.

By Mrs. Annie I. Hughes.
In Western Stock Journal.

In summing up the advantages of the co-operative creamery and why farmers should stand by these organizations instead of patronizing the large centralizers or creameries owned by private individuals, the following are taken into consideration.

First. It insures every cent of profit to the farmers.

Second. It encourages better quality in the output.

Third. It encourages better methods on the farm.

Fourth. It encourages the building up of the home industries.

Fifth. It teaches the farmer that they are business men.

Sixth. It makes a better locality in which to live.

It has been said that a smooth-tongued stranger with authority to offer one-fourth cent more than the market quotation can put any co-operative creamery out of business.

When the machinery of the creamery is lying rusting in the scrap heap and the centralizer or creamery owned by private individuals has full swing, then the farmer will awaken and see the folly of his ways.

When there is no competition from the co-operative organizations then prices will be regulated to the least figure that the farmers will stand and stay in the business. It is not to be wondered at that the big business concerns consider the farmers good plucking, for they have guessed right.

Dairymen must protect themselves by organization as well as other branches of business. Many consider the price of making but do not think of the over run being added to the butter fat which is from one-sixth to one-fifth more added to the butter fat for butter. Therefore, the producer will receive all the returns for his cream except the actual cost of making and getting the butter on the market.

It has been said that the co-operative is the citadel of dairying. If all of the co-operatives should cease business, then the centralizers would put their heads together and fix butter fat prices each month. Their motto is "Divide and Conquer." If you can divide the farmers then you can handle them to your heart's content. They use the farmer for a weapon against himself.

If you own stock in a co-operative creamery value it and think that your co-operative organization helps to keep you on an even footing with the other fellow.
