Marrying the Whole Family.
"I am marrying Tom, but I am not marrying his whole family," said a bride the other day. Yes, but you are. When you get married you do come into relationship with his whole family, and you can't help yourself. I have known a number of cases in which some "sniffy" bride or bridegroom tried to ignore certain members of the "married into" family and later had to be closely connected with them. There was civility on both sides, but the early break could never be quite covered up, though the one who made it would have given anything to have it forgotten. When you get married, unless there are actual criminals there whom duty would forbid you to recognize, accept cordially all of the family into which you are going. Don't be mean and airy about it. Apart from considerations of right and propriety, there may be others which will make you sorry enough if you don't.—Kate Upson Clark in Ladies.

The Caspian Sea Puzzle
Should the tideless Caspian sea be really drying up it is only continuing the process which has been puzzling scientists for the past hundred years. The great dried up salt lakes to the east, south and north of the Caspian no doubt once formed part of the great lake that remains, and Russia may yet be able to build a railway across her inland waterway. But, if inland seas dry up, land elsewhere is sinking under them. Where are the ancient ports that Agrippa used? Under the waves of the Mediterranean. No place in the world seems to have suffered so much from the sinking of the land as the bay of Naples, that paradise of the submarine archaeologist, who is even now making fresh discoveries of buried suburbs and massive blocks of masonry with the stone rings for mooring the Roman galleys. But he has to dive to get at them.—London Citizen.

Home Comforts at Sea.
The circumstances in which one travels on the ocean have vastly improved during the past twenty years. Spring mattresses and brass bedsteads have replaced the old wooden bunks, improved systems of heating and ventilation have been introduced, sanitary arrangements are greatly superior, both in quantity and in quality, while the furnishings of the public apartments and the attractions of the dining saloon vie with those of the finest hotels on shore. Third class passengers have now separate cabins for four, six or eight persons each in place of large open 'tween deck spaces filled with tiers of iron beds and accommodating hundreds. In place of benches and tables along the sides of their sleeping quarters separate dining saloons, smoke rooms and music rooms are provided.

It Gets the Criminals.
According to the Chinese method of criminal prosecution, a man is responsible for the crime he may have committed personally, but if he chooses to escape justice by running away from the place where the deed was committed then the remaining members of his immediate family are held and punished in lieu of the real culprit. This may seem a strange way of attracting the real criminal back to the scene of his crime, but it appeals to the religious side of the man's superstitious nature. According to their religion, the man who forsakes his parents when in peril will find his soul sailing around through hades without chart or compass for all eternity. In view of this, compliance with the law is very prompt, for John Chinaman does not care to take the desperate chance.

Rain Catches in Bermuda.
Notable among the landscape features of Bermuda is the "rain catch." There is no other good water. All the water gained from wells is brackish. So the people either use their whitewashed roofs as a means to catch rain water or they build a big open "catch" on the hillside, with a covered cistern at its foot, into which the rain thus collected runs and is stored. The soil is scraped away from a large surface of the white coral rock that underlies all the island. This surface is cemented and whitewashed, and a low wall built on three sides with the reservoir or tank at the bottom.

Such is Fame.
It is said that Mhearn Misl, a wealthy Asiatic woman, discovered the art of making the perfume known as attar of roses and also invented the beautiful workmanship exhibited in the weaving of the celebrated cashmere shawls. Nothing whatever is known about her death.

Pretty Light.
"I'll have to ask you to pay in advance," remarked the hotel keeper. "Isn't my luggage good enough security?"
"I fear it is a little too emotional."
"Emotional?"
"Yes; easily moved."—London Mail.

Result of Rashness.
"Out of a job, are you?" asked the first girl. "Boss catch you flirting?"
"No; I caught the boss. Say, what sort of a wedding dress do you think is real swell?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Korean Justice.
The Korean judge dispenses justice in the open, and by etiquette only the judge can sit. Every one else must stand, excepting the prisoner and his friends, who are forced to remain in a humble kneeling position with bowed heads. Until quite recently these trials were always very one sided and shockingly unjust, states the Wide World Magazine. When a man was brought to a judge it was taken for granted he was guilty, and if he did not confess he was tortured and made to do so. Witnesses, too, were openly bribed. In fact, giving evidence for or against an accused person meant a living to a portion of the community, and these witnesses naturally favored those who paid best. Punishments varied. If the prisons were too full and the condemned could not pay a fine they were often given a chance to escape or disappeared by some means. Though these things are of the past, Korean judges, like those of China, possess a poor idea of the sense of justice.

An Ancient Mariner's Tale.
A solemn man leaned forward as the train approached the seaside resort. "You see that boardin' house over there. I can tell you a funny story about that. I was stayin' there thirty years since, and there was a 'usband and wife there, too—very pleasant people. One day after dinner 'e says to 'er, as any 'usband might say to any wife, 'Pass me them boots.' And she says to 'im, as any wife might say to any 'usband, 'Get 'em yourself.' And 'e says, 'I'll never ask you for no more boots.'"
"Well, is that all?" asked the victim as the ancient mariner paused for breath.
"No. 'E went out at once and drowned 'imself in those very boots—a new pair fresh on."

The Legs in Swimming.
The correct stroke of the legs is exactly like that of a frog's hind legs. Watch one of these frogs and copy his style. You cannot do better. The legs are drawn up together slowly, not with a jerk, until they are gathered in close under the body. Then with a sudden, quick spring they are shot out behind, the ankles being turned so that the soles of the feet present as flat a surface as possible to the water and so offer more resistance from which to make progress. As the kick is made the legs should be spread out in the shape of a letter V, but not allowed to sink far down under the surface of the water. If they kick downward at an angle instead of out straight behind much of their energy is wasted in unnecessarily forcing the body out of the water instead of forward.

Curious Epitaphs.
Old New England graveyards are not the only ones which contain curious epitaphs. The old time dweller of Maine who "died of a falling tree," as his headstone asserts, had a fellow in misfortune in faroff Austria, as is shown by W. A. Baillie-Grohman's "The Tyrol and the Tyrolees."
A wooden slab, painted with the representation of a prostrate tree under which lies a man in spread eagle attitude, bears testimony to the violent death of "Johann Lemberger, aged fifty-two and three-quarters years. This upright and virtuous youth was squashed by a falling tree."
The record of Michael Gerstner is even more succinct and convincing. He "climbed up, fell down and was dead."

Baseball Versus Cricket.
We have known only one big league ball player to partake both of baseball and cricket as a pastime. He was the late Harry Vaughn, who played cricket in his early English days and later on became one of the star catchers of the Cincinnati Reds. Remember Rhines and Vaughn?
We asked Vaughn one day what he regarded as the main difference between baseball and cricket.
His answer was the keenest we have ever heard to this query.
"The main difference," he replied,

The Telegram in New Ownership.

The Oregonian Publishing Company has sold the Evening Telegram to John E. and L. R. Wheeler and John F. Carroll, the latter for the past eight years its editor and manager. The Wheelers are engaged in the lumber and timber business and have been identified with Portland for about ten years. A newspaper deal has been contemplated by them for the past year and negotiations to buy The Telegram have been vigorously in progress for some time past. The deal was closed yesterday and Monday morning the new owners will take possession and The Telegram thereafter will be under their exclusive control and direction.
The Telegram has heretofore been printed by the Oregonian mechanical plant and that arrangement will be continued for several months to come until such time as The Telegram can secure its own quarters and its own complete mechanical outfit. For the same length of time it will occupy its present quarters in the Oregonian building. It is the purpose, of course at the earliest possible moment to secure its own quarters and its own complete mechanical equipment.—Telegram, July 25.

He Sure Had.

The pompous judge glared sternly over his spectacles at the tattered prisoner who had been dragged before the bar of justice on a charge of vagrancy.
"Have you ever earned a dollar in your life?" he asked in fine scorn.
"Yes, your honor," was the response. "I voted for you at the last election."—New York Globe.
