DEVELOPMENT INDICATED BY REPORT OF STATE ENGINEER J. H. LEWIS

Cost of Proposed Works Approximately $3,000,000.00.

During the quarter ending September 30, 1914, State Engineer John H. Lewis, issued 173 permits for the appropriation of water. These permits give the cost of proposed works as approximately $3,000,000 and involve the construction of 230 miles of canal lines, the development of 30,460 horsepower and the irrigation of 13,100 acres of land.

The issuance of permits by the State Engineer's office may be taken as an index to the general development throughout the State along irrigation and power lines.

The fees collected by this department during the past quarter exceed those collected in the same period last year by 25 per cent and the money deposited with the State Treasurer during the first three quarters of 1914, amounting to $10,173.00, exceeds the appropriation for the administrative expenses of the office for an entire year.

In Morrow County one permit was issued to J. S. Crooks of Castle Rock, for the irrigation of 20 acres of land, diverting water from the Columbia River in Sec. 12, T. 4 S., R. 24 E., W. M.

PROHIBITION EFFECTIVE IN STATE OF MAINE

October 15, 1914.

To the Editor:-
I beg to offer you for publication my personal observation of the working of the prohibition law in the State of Maine, which extends over a period of 20 years. I have visited Maine at least once a year during that time and for seven of those years I was a resident and citizen of Maine.

During that period I have lived in three other states and I have visited nearly all the large cities in all the states. Everywhere I have learned what I could concerning various methods of regulating the liquor traffic.

Through this varied experience, the conviction has been forced upon me that the absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is the only policy which the liquor interests regard as seriously damaging to the traffic and the only policy which greatly aids the cause of temperance.

After seven years of residence in Maine under the prohibitory law, and seven years of residence in states under local option, I am convinced that my children, and other people's children, for whom I may be responsible in school and college, are far better protected from the evils of the liquor traffic in prohibition Maine than in any local option state which I have lived in or visited. As far as the dangers of the liquor traffic are concerned, I would rather have my children brought up in prohibition Maine than in any state which forms a partnership with saloons by accepting a part of the profits.

What I say applies to Maine as it used to be. Even though the prohibition of the sale of liquor did not prevent the sale of liquor any more than the prohibition of the illicit practice of medicine wholly prevented such practice, or the prohibition of robbery entirely eliminated robbers.

But Maine today for one potent reason is able to enforce the prohibitory law as never before. That reason is the Webb law, a federal regulation which now protects Maine, in a degree never before known, from the onslaughts of dealers in adjacent local-option territory.

Every argument I have read purporting to show the failure of the prohibitory law in Maine applies to conditions before this law went into effect. Then express companies operated in Maine for the sole purpose of selling liquor. They brought it into the state from Portsmouth and Boston and Chicago, labeled "breakfast foods", "Ivory soap", and even "dry goods". No law could reach the traffic. Now such goods can be seized in transit at any station or any platform, from any car or delivery wagon, and destroyed. Every state is, therefore, now far better prepared to enforce prohibition than by all the anti-prohibition arguments Maine was in the period referred to I have seen.

I do not maintain that the prohibitory law in Maine even now completely stops the sale of liquor. What I do maintain, after years of experience in various states, is first, that Maine formerly controlled the traffic better than local-option states, and that now prohibition in Maine, aided by new federal laws, is more effective than ever before.

A HORSE OR A CHILD—WHICH?

The proposed Dentistry Bill gives the preference to the horse.

To treat a horse, a veterinary surgeon in Oregon must have three full college years of special study and a diploma of graduation from a recognized college.

To treat the mouth of a child, the Dentistry Bill requires of a dentist but 12 months' training.

The mouth of a child may be disfigured for life by neglect or unskilled treatment.
