CENTRAL OREGON INDUSTRY AWAKENS

With the purchase by the T. H. Shelvin Lumber Company of 60,000 acres of yellow pine timber from the Deschutes Lumber Company for a reported consideration of $3,000,000, it is expected that preparations will be made during the year to begin cutting timber on an extensive scale. The announcement of the deal in The Oregonian yesterday has directed the attention of railroad men and lumbermen to the fact that Central Oregon is on the eve of a tremendous development.

When the facts are recognized that there are only three sawmills in the district with a total capacity of less than 65,000 feet and there is approximately 20,000,000,000 feet of saw timber tributary to Bend, some idea of the future of that territory can be gained when big sawmill and logging operations are started.

The timber belt of Central Oregon comprises an area extending from Bend south to the California line, a distance of 125 miles in length by 50 miles in width. Klamath Falls, to the south and Bend to the north, are the natural milling and marketing points for this timber. The northern half of this area is covered with a fine stand of yellow or Western white pine. On the swales and along the rivers, black pine has a dense growth.

Yellow pine of Central Oregon presents a most attractive appearance from the standpoint of the logger. There is no underbrush and the land is almost level. Stumpage will average about 16,000 feet to the acre, running as high as 25,000 feet on some tracts. The average tree will cut five to six 14 to 16-foot logs. The average butt diameter is from 30 to 40 inches, holding a uniform size well into the branches. The timber will average 10 per cent clear and from 35 to 40 per cent shop.

Ideal conditions are presented in Central Oregon for the use of electricity in logging and milling operations. The Deschutes River, which is fed by subterranean streams, has a maximum rise of less than 12 inches. It is estimated that the 12-mile stretch immediately south of Bend has a potential horsepower of 250,000. This power can be converted into electrical units and transmitted to logging and manufacturing points at minimum costs of installation and operation.

The three mills now operating at Bend are: The Bend Company, daily capacity of 30,000 feet; Bend Brick & Lumber Company, daily capacity 20,000; E. A. Griffin Company, capacity, 12,000 feet.

The following are the principal timber owners:

T. H. Shelvin Lumber Company, of Minneapolis, 180,000 acres; Christian Mueller Lumber Company, of Davenport, Ia., 30,000 acres; Scanlon-Gipson Lumber Company, of Minneapolis, 28,000 acres; Bend Timber Company, of Minneapolis, 35,000 acres; Alworth-Washburn Lumber Company, of Minneapolis, 255,000 acres; Gilchrist & Sons, of Alpena, Mich., 92,000 acres; Northwest Timber Company, of Portland, 24,000 acres.
