Her Affectionate Family.

Reference at a recent dinner was made to affectionate families, when Congressman John W. Abercomble, of Alabama, was reminded of a happy little incident along that line.

Some time ago a fond father attended the graduation of his pretty daughter from a fashionable seminary, and at the close of the exercises the head of the in-stitution rushed up to papa with hands enthusiastically outstretched.

"I want to congratulate you, Mr. Smith," said he with great volubility, "on your very large and extraordinary affectionate family!"

"Large and affectionate family!" won-deringly repeated Mr. Smith, "Yes," was the happy rejoinder of the principal; "during the last term all of
