ley loganberries are nothing of the sort. He does not spit on his hands and swear when he makes the statement, but he affirms with great affirmation that the so-called loganberries are phenomenal berries, a product so far ahead of loganberries that no respectable person will mention them in the same breath. Luther says the loganberry is a soft, mushy, tasteless thing that will not ship, is unlovely to look upon, and produces juice with no more virtue than circus lemonade. That's the limit in criticism, and it has weight of authority, though there are some authorities who disagree. However, the California wizard is unconcerned with the disagreement—his name is Burbank, and that ought to be enough to satisfy anybody. And Burbank says, says he, that not until he took the little old loganberry and gave it a dose of Burbankitis did it assume any caste at all. Then somebody got hold of a sprig of his rejuvenated loganberry, which he rechristened "Phenomenal Berry," and they took it to Oregon. It grew there at a terrific rate, and the phenomenal thing is so very common that the new invention from California probably outgrew its name. At least the word "phenomenal" got misplaced and the wonderful big red berry that has produced the juice that William Jennings Bryan says is the best that ever happened is now known as loganberry. The question is, is it? Who first brought the berry into Oregon, and where did reader, know anything about it, please send the information to "Publicity" Oregon Building. he get his slip or cane? DIRECTIONS FOR CONTROLLING SMUT

How to Prevent a Disease Which Frequently Causes Serious Loss to Wheat Growers—Plant Treated Seed—Rotate Crops.

Wheat growers in this country not infrequently experience serious losses caused by preventable diseases. Wheat is preyed upon by a number of parasite fungi, three of which are classes as smuts. Two of these smuts are common pests in the wheat fields of North America; the other, commonly known as flag smut, is thus far unknown to this continent, though it is fairly common in Australia and certain other parts of the world where wheat culture has been in progress for centuries.

Of the two smuts, bunt or covered smut of wheat, sometimes referred to as stinking smut, is found wherever wheat is grown, sometimes resulting in losses to the farmers of the United States of $20,000,000 or more annually. Not infrequently fields planted to untreated seed and giving promise of yielding 30 to 40 bushels per acre of good wheat will produce a crop of covered smut amounting, in some cases, to as much as 40 to 60 per cent of the crop.

This smut disease is caused by a parasitic fungus which attacks the growing wheat plant before the first leaf appears above ground. Once inside the attacked seedling it continues its growth, and by the time the wheat begins to head the diseased plants produce a crop of smut. If we examine the heads of such a plant we find, instead of normal wheat grains, only a lot of smut balls. In other words, the materials produced by the living plant for the purpose of building up sound wheat grains have been consumed by the parasite in forming its masses of smut spores which finally occupy the exact position in the wheat heads that would have been filled by the kernels had they been allowed to develop. These smut balls consist of nothing but millions of spores inclosed in each case by a thin enveloping membrane. When the smut balls are crushed the spores give off an odor not unlike that of herring brine. The liberated spores become attached to the seed, which, if planted without previous treatment, may produce another crop of smutted wheat.

Bunt or covered smut of wheat is one of the most easily prevented of any of the cereal diseases. The following procedure is recommended: Run all seed wheat through a fanning mill in order to blow out the unbroken smut balls. This being done, the grain should be soaked 10 minutes in a solution consisting of 1 pound of commercial formalin (obtainable at nearly all drug stores) added to 40 gallons of water. The seed thus treated is next allowed to drain and is then piled on the floor until sufficiently dry to sow. If during this process the kernels have swollen very much, the drill should be set to sow a little thicker, else the quantity sown per acre will be less than intended.

Recent experiments have shown that in certain sections of the country the soil of a field producing a crop of smutted wheat this year may harbor enough smut spores to cause smut in next year's crop if the field be reseeded to wheat. This sometimes occurs where smut is very bad, in spite of the planting of treated seed, and shows that in such localities crop rotation should be practised in addition to seed treatment. Bunt or covered smut of wheat attacks no other cereal crop, but other cereals have their own smut diseases.

The other wheat smut occurring in this country, known commonly as loose smut, is not so serious as bunt, although it probably produces an average loss of three-fourths of 1 per cent of the total wheat crop of the country. Loose smut may be prevented by treating the seed by the Jensen hot water method or some modification of it.

The Jensen method consists in soaking the seed for 10 to 15 minutes in hot water at a temperature of 132 to 133 degrees F. It is highly important that the water shall not rise over 135 degrees or fall below 130 degrees F. A temperature below this will not kill the smut, while a temperature too high may affect the germination of the seed. The grain, after treatment, should be immediately spread out to dry. If it can not be spread at once, it should be dipped in cold water to cool and spread as soon as possible.
