Entertainment Big Success.
On Friday evening the Men's class of the Federated Sunday School gave a rather unique entertainment which was greatly enjoyed by the large audience. After pleasing readings by Glee Boyer and M. L. Case and several selections on the phonograph, the program took the form of a burlesque mock trial. Fred Tash was arrested for disturbing the peace on Sunday morning, January 15. The defendant pleaded guilty, but the trial continued nevertheless. Various witnesses showed in what way Mr. Tash had disturbed the peace, and in this manner worked in several pleasing musical and elocutionary numbers. The climax came, after the counsel for the defense and prosecution had addressed the jury simultaneously, when the judge charged the jury. He charged them 10 cents each, and fined the defendant 50 cents with the proviso that the attorneys each contribute 10 cents toward the payment of the fine. After the jury had paid the sheriff the attorneys for the defense presented the overwhelming evidence that January 15 came on Saturday, and not on Sunday, as charged in the complaint. We are sorry that lack of space prohibits us from giving this affair the prominence it deserves, but next week we will publish the list of new court rules established at this trial.
