SUDAN GRASS SEED IS SELLING CHEAPER

Demand Has Resulted in Largely Increased Production and Consequent Reduction in Price.

Sudan grass, the new annual hay grass introduced from Sudan in 1909, was so enthusiastically received by the farmers in the semiarid portion of the United States that in 1913 the seed which was available only in limited quantities sold readily at $1 per pound and even more. These unusual prices gave Sudan grass seed production a great impetus, so that in 1914 seed was much more abundant, the crop being roughly estimated at from five to six million pounds. Three or four million pounds of this amount were produced in western Texas, where for a time an attempt was made to maintain the price at $1 per pound. In other localities, however, the seed was offered at 25 to 30 cents per pound, and as a result of this a great deal of the Texas seed of the 1914 crop remained unsold in 1915. This surplus seed carried over from 1914, together with that from the 1915 crop, has fully supplied the demand, and the price of seed has dropped to 5 cents or less a pound wholesale, and from 7 to 10 cents a pound retail. Under favorable conditions seed can be profitably grown for 5 cents per pound, since yields of 500 pounds per acre are quite common, and 1,000 pounds per acre very often are obtained under favorable conditions without irrigation. With irrigation the yields may reach 2,000 pounds per acre. Sudan grass is usually grown in cultivated rows when a seed crop is desired. Planted in this way it is readily harvested with a row binder, and after curing well in the field it can be thrashed with an ordinary grain separator. Since no special machinery is required to handle the seed crop, the expenses are reduced to a minimum, and there remains no reason why the seed should not be reasonably cheap and abundant.

The most dangerous weed pest of Sudan grass fields is Johnson grass. This grass is common in the South and not infrequently occurs in fields of Sudan grass. The seeds of Johnson grass resemble Sudan grass so closely that only the very closest examination will reveal their presence, hence.

An admixture of Johnson grass does not injure the quality of the Sudan grass hay crop, but it is a matter of decided importance when it comes to the production of seed for market purposes. Those who have land in the South free from Johnson grass consider it a decided injustice to be sold Sudan grass seed containing an admixture of Johnson grass. A method has been discovered whereby it is possible to identify, with reasonable certainty, the seed of Johnson grass when it is mixed with that of Sudan grass. This method of seed examination, however, can not be considered as an unfailing protection against infestation of a farmer's fields with Johnson grass. A safer plan is for the southern farmer to purchase his own seed where possible or purchase seed that has been grown north of the Johnson grass area, that is, north of a line where Johnson grass persists in the soil as a perennial. In the region where winter freezes are severe enough to kill the underground rootstocks very little Johnson grass is found. The only way seed of it can occur in Sudan grass seed, therefore, is through willful mixing of the seed, but as Johnson grass seed can not be grown so cheaply as Sudan grass seed there is now no object in such adulteration. Where reasonable care is used by the seed grower to obtain pure seed with which to plant his fields in the North there then remains little chance of an admixture with seed of Johnson grass.

Many of the farmers in the South will be forced to buy their seed, because the presence of the sorghum midge in humid parts of the Southern States interferes seriously with seed production. The midge is most abundant close to the Gulf of Mexico, and there its attacks result in almost complete sterility of the Sudan grass. Farther north in these States, where the midge is not so abundant nor so uniformly present throughout the summer, a partial crop of seed often can be obtained, and in some cases a full crop of seed will set during a period when the midge is not present.

In the dry atmosphere farther west the midge is not troublesome, and in Arizona, New Mexico, and California large yields of seed can be obtained under irrigation.

Sudan grass deserves a much wider use as a hay crop throughout the Southern States and in the irrigated sections of the Southwest, and this continued and enlarged use for hay purposes should provide a steady demand for good pure seed. Information regarding present sources of seed will be furnished by the department to those who wish to buy seed. More extended information regarding the culture of this grass is contained in Farmers' Bulletin 605, which is sent free on application to the Division of Publications, Department of Agriculture.
