OLD DISPUTE AT THE DALLES IS SETTLED

Indian Sam Williams Became Citizen of the United States.

Sam Williams, Indian, became a citizen of the United States and gained thereby the inalienable right of paying taxes, but he lost his tribal right to fish for salmon on the south shore of the Columbia river near The Dalles where Seufert Brothers carry on their extensive fishing and canning operations.

This, in effect, is the opinion sustained by Federal Judge Wolverton at Portland Monday morning.

It concludes the notable case of the government against the Seufert interests so far as the district federal court is concerned. Judge A. S. Bennett of The Dalles, who appeared before the court yesterday said that an appeal will be taken directly to the supreme court of the United States. Judge Wolverton's formal decree is expected to be handed down one week from Monday.

The terms of the decree will recognize the right of the Yakima Indians to fish for salmon on the south shore of the Columbia under the treaty of 1855. This right they have even if in getting to the fishing ground involves passing over privately owned lands because as the treaty is construed it grants an easement over these lands.

Judge Wolverton's decision is the first judicial recognition on the right of the Yakima Indians to come from the Washington side and fish under their treaty of 1855. The case was brought by the government in behalf of Sam Williams and Yakima Indians generally.

Judge Wolverton has decided that a question as to the boundary of the Seufert property must be settled in the State Court. The Seuferts claim as mainland a portion of the bank which the United States district attorney's office insists is the property of the state. Deputy United States District Attorney, Robert R. Rankin appeared for the government Monday morning. He argued that Sam Williams remained a ward of the government and kept his tribal rights even though he had become a citizen. This view the Federal judge did not accept. The Dalles Optimist.

DEER SEASON WILL OPEN WEDNESDAY AUG. 15th

Local nimrods are oiling up their fire arms and assembling their camp outfits, preparatory measures for the greeting of the deer season. The season opens on the 15th of August.

Many deer have been seen in the lower mountains this year and the season should prove a lucrative one for the wily hunter. Grass on the range has been good all summer and conditions have been ideal for the little animals.

There was some anxiety felt for a while that the severe winter may have gone hard with the deer, but from the signs in the mountains there is no indication of a shortage.

Deer season opens on the 15th of August and closes on the 31st of October. This pertains to deer with horns and bag limit is three to each season. The law further provides that the deer, after being killed, must be properly tagged with a tag taken from the license bearing the name of the hunter and the date on which the animal was killed to be attached in such a manner that it shall be in plain sight at all times.

Would you like to know (without trying, we hope) a tested recipe for scandal? Here it is in the words of a discriminating observer: "Take a grain of falsehood, a handful of run-about, the same quantity of nimble tongue, a sprig of herb backbite, a teaspoonful of don't-you-tell-it, six drops of malice and a few of envy. Add a little discontent and jealousy, and strain thru a bag of misconstruction and cork up tight in a bottle of malevolence and hang it out on a skein of street yarn; keep it in a hot atmosphere, shake it occasionally for a few days and it will be ready for use. Let a few drops be taken before walking out, and the desired results will follow."—Biblical Recorder

Some Wheat in Lexington Country Is Already Threshed.

A trip through the wheat producing section north of Lexington reveals the fact that much of the grain there has already been headed and threshed. Some of the farmers in that locality are using the system of heading and threshing together. In a year like the present one, this system is considered a good one. The Pointer-McMillan machine and the W. F. Barnett thresher are running now. They have threshed some wheat that has yielded as high as 35 bushels per acre. Twenty bushels to the acre is a conservative estimate for the north Lexington wheat crop this year.

WORK OF REPLANTING TREES IS PROGRESSING

Tree Planting Near Mount Hebo Shows Good Results.

More than 90 per cent of the trees planted by the Forest Service this spring at Hebo, Tillamook County, Oregon, on the Siuslaw National Forest, are still living, according to an inspection report just received by J. F. Kummel, Portland, Oregon, who has charge of the Forest Service planting operations in Oregon and Washington.

Seven hundred acres were planted in April and May with two-year-old Douglas fir seedlings, grown at the Wind River Nursery near Carson, Washington. The trees are spaced about 8' x 8', making a few less than 700 trees to the acre. The total cost of planting was $8.50 per acre. This includes cost of growing the trees at the nursery and getting them to the area, as well as the actual planting operation.

For several years the Forest Service has been reforesting the treeless hills about Mount Hebo, and getting very satisfactory results. According to Mr. Kummel, the planting this year has been the most successful yet made in the District. Not only is the loss very small, but the living trees grade up so well as to thriftiness. This is particularly encouraging, as the area is rather exposed with rocky soil and bears considerable vegetation which makes planting difficult. While it is expected that the fall report on this area will show considerably greater loss, as some of the trees will be killed by summer drought, the plantation gives promise of being completely successful.

This planting is part of the general plan for reforestation which the Forest Service is carrying out in all the National Forest States as rapidly as funds and planting stock are available says Mr. Kummel. Already 125,000 acres capable of bearing trees on the is planned to go on each spring and fall until the old burns that are not restocking naturally and the barren areas capable of bearing trees on the various 153 National Forests are planted up. Over 15,000 acres were planted in 1915.

THE JOLLY ENTERTAINERS AT STAR THEATER

The Jolly Entertainers, juvenile fun makers, will appear at the Star theater next Monday and Tuesday. There are few organizations like the Jolly Entertainers on the road. The entire troupe consists of 24 children, members of the De Moines, Washington Home for children. They have perfected an excellent band, have individual solists and special performers.

Aside from the musical part of the entertainment, the kiddies put on a play, which is replete with fun. Although the entertainment which these orphan children present merits a hearty support from the public, the act that the children are self-supporting should go a long way toward giving them a full house. No support is received from state, county, city, lodge or other institution. Don't fail to hear these children.
