BURR MCINTOSH APPEARS IN ODD DRAMA

"My Partner" Big Feature at the Star Theatre Next Sunday.

An excellent adaptation of Bartley Campbell's noted success, "My Partner," has been made for the screen and will appear at the Star Theatre as a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, with Burr McIntosh in the leading role, next Sunday.

As it will be recalled by those who have seen the play, Joe Saunders, Siskiyou's leading citizen, miner, gentleman and all-around favorite, has loved Mary Brandon ever since he had come to Siskiyou as a child. Mary is a sweet, gentle-mannered girl of nineteen. Together with her younger sister, Grace, she keeps house for her father, and furnishes the only spot of light and joy to the hearts of many of the rough, kind-hearted men of the town.

Mary knows of Joe's devotion, and loves him, too, in her simple, girlish way, until one day Ned Singleton, a young stranger comes to town. He is a handsome, enthusiastic chap with winsome manners and a good heart, and soon he has won the love and respect of the whole community. He gains the unbounded admiration of Joe Saunders by catching a Mexican who cheated at cards, and Joe asked him to become his partner.

On a prospecting expedition, Joe and Ned find gold, but the younger man falls from a cliff and is carried back to the little mining town unconscious. Due to the tender care of Joe and Mary he recovers his health, but seriously loses his heart to the girl. Mary has grown to care for Ned than for Joe.

On the night of Mary's twentieth birthday, Joe follows her when she leaves the happy party given in her honor, into the woods. He tells her of his great love for her, and asks her to marry him. Mary is forced for the first time to confess to Joe her love for his partner. She leaves him heart-broken and sad, and goes on to keep her tryst with Ned at lover's rock.

Joe comes upon them just as Mary pleads with her lover to marry her at once, as he had promised. The big kind-hearted miner steps in and forces Ned to promise he will marry her at once. In the meantime Scraggs, the villain, who loved Mary's mother and now loves her, has tried to force his suit. He goes to Ned's cabin, bent on stirring up trouble and sees Joe as he rides away after trying to divide up and split partnership with the boy. When Scraggs accuses Mary of being Joe's mistress, Ned jumps at his throat, and in the tussle which follows, he is killed. The villain tears the one bloody cuff from his shirt and hides it in the holes of the hearth from which Joe had taken out their strong box before leaving and runs to the village to say that Ned Singleton has been murdered and that he had seen Joe Saunders leave the cabin.

When the men arrive at Ned's shack they find Joe bending over the dead body of his partner. He had returned too late to proffer the hand which he had refused before.

At the trial Joe is acquitted, and Scraggs is accused, and in the face of every one Joe marries Mary because he loves her, and to preserve her good name.

School will soon commence. Were your children backward in their studies last year? If so it may be due to eye trouble of some kind. An education obtained at the expense of eye sight, is of small value. It is better to obtain both by seeing that the children's eyes are right. Children cannot tell you whether their eyes are right or wrong. Bring them to Dr. Turner and let him give their eyes a most thorough searching and scientific examination with the latest improved electrical instruments, and he will tell you whether they are right or wrong. Is not such information almost beyond price? Yet there is no charge for consultation or examination. If they do not need glasses, Dr. Turner will most positively not recommend them. You owe this to your children. Dr. Turner will have a private office at Palace hotel during Fair. Consult him. He has been making regular visits to Heppner every thirty days for nearly three years, and absolutely guarantees satisfaction. Don't forget the date.

URGES SPORTSMAN TO USE PRECAUTION

Emphasizing the destruction of property and human life caused by careless hunters, a warning issued by the Forest Service urges all sportsmen on the National Forests to use the greatest possible care to prevent forest fires and to avoid such accidents as caused the death of Forest Ranger Clark on the Cabinet National Forest in Montana last year.

Mr. Clark was mistaken for a bear by a careless hunter, who fired without waiting to be sure what he was shooting at. To show that such accidents are not uncommon the warning quotes an estimate of the Biological Survey that between 150 and 200 persons are annually killed in hunting accidents in this country and that this number is increasing. Furthermore, it is stated, 15 per cent of all the forest fires in the National Forests are caused by careless hunters and other campers.

The National Forests, it is pointed out, contain the best hunting grounds in the country. The number of game animals is increasing on account of the protection from forest fires and illegal killing which is afforded by Forest officers. On many of the Forests, deer, elk, mountain sheep and other species are plentiful, while small game is unusually abundant. Bear, mountain lion, and other predatory animals are found on most of the Forests and the killing of these meat eaters is encouraged because they prey on domestic stock and the herbivorous game animals.

The value of the Forests for hunting grounds depends largely upon whether they are protected from fire. Forest fires destroy the range and breeding places of the game and often kill large numbers of the animals, themselves, while a great many more are driven out of the country by the flames. Furthermore, streams flowing through burned-over areas are subject to such extreme variations of flow and are often so choked up with deposits of sediment that fish cannot live in them.

Each year sees an increase in the number of persons who visit the National Forests for hunting and other recreation purposes. Every effort is made to encourage this use of the Forests. The best indication of a man's fitness to be in the woods, the warning points out, is the care which he shows in handling fire arms and fire. None but the most inexperienced tenderfoot will shoot without getting a plain view of his game, while the man who lets his campfire escape or who carelessly drops a lighted match or hot tobacco ashes betrays at once his ignorance of the fundamental principles of woodcraft.

We are offering one of the best residences in Heppner at a sacrifice. If you want a good home and have $600 cash we can do business, for our terms on the balance will be your terms. There is no better bargain in Heppner. We will be glad to show it to you at any time.

How to Cut Roses.

There is a right and a wrong way to cut roses. The choice of the latter may seriously injure the blossom-producing properties of the plants, it is pointed out by specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. This applies particularly, of course, to rose plants chosen and grown especially for cut-flower production. Such roses will be largely of the perpetual blooming sorts.

When a rose is cut from such plants—tea roses or other perpetual bloomers—only two or three eyes of the current season's growth of that branch should be left on the plant. This should give the roses very long stems. Succeeding blossoms should be cut close to the ground. It will seem like destroying the bush to take so much off it, but if the object is the production of roses, the cutting away of the surplus wood will attain the desired end.

If the spring pruning has not been sufficiently severe the plant is likely to have long, naked stalks and short stems to the flowers. With this character of growth only one or two strong leaf buds should be left on the branch when the flower is cut, so as to stimulate as much growth as possible from the base of the plant.

The greatest temptation to leave wood is where there are two or more buds on one branch, some being small when the terminal one is open. This temptation to follow a bad practice can be avoided by pinching off all side shoots after a bud has formed on the end of a branch. This prevents the formation of two or more buds on one stalk. This summer pruning will encourage additional blooms on varieties which bloom more than once a year.

We will loan money on good improved farms in Morrow county and we are also prepared to make loans on improved stock ranches. If you desire a loan come and see us if you want a loan on Heppner residence property we can arrange it for you.
