THRILLING STORY TOLD IN NEW PHOToplay

William Clifford and Margaret Gibson in "The Hidden Law" at Star Theatre.

That there is a hidden law of justice which rewards virtue and punishes evil doing is a theme that dramatists have ever been on the alert to use because of its universal appeal. This basic idea has been treated in a novel and ingenious manner in the Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "The Hidden Law," a five act emotional drama produced by Horsley which comes to the Star Theatre on Sunday with William Clifford and Margaret Gibson in the leading roles.

The story centers about John Carlton, a writer who has a play stolen from him by an unscrupulous theatrical manager. He is robbed of his royalties, and when he attempts to obtain by force what he believes is justly his he is arrested and sentenced to prison. At the expiration of his sentence embittered by his harsh experiences he retires to the mountains where he engages in the life of a "Dick Turpin." He falls in love with Wanda known as the Princess of the mountains. He guards her from all intruders and she looks upon him as a father.

She meets a young hunter from the East and experiences her first sensations of love. Carlton's life is brought to light and seeing that his hope of marrying Wanda will not materialize he returns East where the success he was robbed of early in his career comes to him as a final reward after his years of struggle. Wanda and her sweetheart stay in the country of her childhood.

Pretty Margaret Gibson as the mountain princess has a charming and sympathetic role which she plays with all her wonderful ability for true screen characterization. William Clifford as John Carlton displays his keen sense of fitness to his role and lends dignity and force to his interpretation. John Oaker as the juvenile is well cast. The Bostock animals figure prominently in the picture.

NATIONAL DEFENSE NOT A MATTER OF POLITICS

Washington D. C., Sept. 20.—"I am surprised to read in the despatches from Maine that William M. Ingraham, Assistant Secretary of War, claims that the Democrats are to be credited with giving the country the best Army bill that has ever been passed.

"We republicans," said Representative Julius Kahn, of California, ranking minority member of the House Committee on Military Affairs, "have always contended that the National Defense is not a matter of party politics. Every patriotic citizen is equally interested in seeing his country properly prepared regardless of political affiliations.

"As a matter of fact many of the provisions of the Preparedness law of June 3rd, 1916, were written into the measure by Republicans. This is especially true of such provisions as those providing for an enlisted reserve corps, for an increased medical corps, for training camps for civilians, for short term enlistments, for the manufacture of tools and gauges in times of peace so that the supply of ammunition can materially be increased in times of war, for the creation of the grade of Aviator which will enable civilians to be commissioned in the aviation section, and numerous other provisions.

"So far as the increased strength of the Army is concerned, a Democratic House refused to authorize anything in excess of 140,000 enlisted men, minimum strength of the Regular Army. The Republicans constantly insisted on a larger Regular Army and finally succeeded in raising the strength to a minimum of 178,000 men.

"The Republicans claim no especial praise for having voted for these splendid features. They only did their duty to their country and they resent the attempt of Democratic officials to claim credit for the legislation as a Democratic partisan measure.

Many candidates running for office have no hesitancy in saying that the state has a multiplicity of laws, the effect of which is to complicate business to the point of inefficiency and that mounting cost of government indicates the need of calling a halt.

Newspaper reports say Great Britain is facing general railroad strike or a raise in the employees wages or a decrease in food price. It seems that government ownership of railroad lines has no effect in preventing strikes.

Prineville voting $100,000 bonds to aid in financing construction of railroad from main line of Oregon trunk to that city by a vote of 358 to one, is the greatest advertisement it can give the world that it wants capital to come there and invest and that it is willing to back its invitation with an investment of its own.
