ADVOCATES INDUS. TRIAL DEVELOPMENT

In a recent speech in Portland, Congressman McArthur said: "We in Portland and in Oregon must do what we can to encourage capital to come in here. We need more capital to build up industries that will give our workmen work and increase our payrolls. We must do what we can to develop our agricultural resources."

"One thing that will help bring prosperity is the development of the water power resources of this section. Yet Congress' neglect of this matter of developing the water power of the Northwest has been almost criminal."

Mr. McArthur said he favored sensible conservation of resources, but thought that permitting streams having millions of potential power to waste their undeveloped energy flowing to the sea was hardly conserving water power for future generations. He emphasizes the need of manufacturing nitrates from the air to make this country independent in time of war.

"We need more industries here," continued Mr. McArthur, "and that brings me to the progress of shipbuilding, which I notice is being handled here in a practical manner."

"If we are to keep up in the industrial race after the war, and are to be able to carry our products to the markets of the world, we must build our own ships to carry these products."
