

KITTY GORDON
IN
"VERA THE MEDIUM"

"KICK IN" TO BE AT THE STAR.

Manager Sparks of the Star Theatre announces that he will show the Pathe Gold Rooster Play "Kick In" Saturday. In doing so he brings to the attention of every theatre-goer the name of a play which was a real sensation in New York City, which had a long run in Chicago and other large cities and which was hailed everywhere as being the best play of its kind in many seasons.

A. H. Woods produced the original play from the pen of Willard Mack. The complete cast of the motion picture production made under the direction of George Fitzmaurice is: William Courtney as "Chick Hewes," Robert Clugston as "Benny," Mollie King as "Mollie Hewes," Richard Tabor as "Charlie," her brother, Susanne Willa as "Myrtle," John Boyle as "Commissioner Garvey."

The feature at the Star Theatre on Sunday, May 20, will be Kitty Gordon in "Vera the Medium," an adaptation of Richard Harding Davis' famous novel by the same name. This is the first production by the great English beauty as the head of her own film corporation and is expected to win her hundreds of thousands of new admirers.

The story deals in a highly dramatic fashion with the lure of women and the folly of men and affords the star an opportunity to wear dozens of astounding gowns and to make the most of her remarkable dramatic talent. Supporting Miss Gordon will be seen such screen players as Lowell Sherman, Grant Hitchcock, Joyce Fair, Grace Blow, Gordon Harris and Frank Goldsmith.

THE NEWEST BLUEBIRD.

When millionaire Elihu Bennett's daughter Ruth insisted upon taking a course in business college the fond parent made no objection, but when the girl wanted to take a position in his office as stenographer, the old gentleman balked. Rather self-willed the girl determined to some day become a regular "sure-enough" stenographer. Her chance came when her father hired a girl to go to the redwood forests of California to work in his office there. Ruth played a trick on her father, bribed the girl who was regularly employed to surrender her credentials, and when Miss Bennett, under the other girl's name, took the job, events in Hume, Ca., started to move swiftly.

Bennett was one of a syndicate of millionaires who wanted to corral the standing timber and pay the squatters practically nothing for their interests. Ferdinand Stocker represented Bennett, and as Stocker's stenographer, Ruth learned that there was a game of "double crossing" that applied both to the squatters and the timber monopolists that worked both ways to the benefit of Stocker's private purse. Miss Bennett likewise discovered that Jerry Simpson, a young man who spent his leisure studying law that he might better fit himself to defend his father and neighbors against the inroads of the "timber ring," was not alone a clever chap but an extremely manly and upright person, worthy of regard, and certainly attractive in his many personal characteristics.

How Ruth worked out the solution that sent Stocker down the timber "chutes" to his death, and ultimately secured for herself a very fine specimen of mountain manhood as a husband, will be detailed in Bluebird Photoplays at the Star Theatre on Friday, May 18, with Myrtle Gonzales enacting the role of the heroine and Val Paul, Fred Church, George Herlander and other clever players supporting her. The scenic glories of the Sierras, the grandeur of the redwood forests of California and the correctness of natural embellishments will be naturally photographed as settings for the various episodes.
