

Jake Wells Sells Property.
 Jake Wells, county assessor, sold his residence property in the upper end of town last week to J. H. Frad, the black horse wheat farmer. Mr. Frad is moving into town in order that his daughter may attend high school during the winter. He had thought only of renting at first, but upon finding no houses for rent he was obliged to buy. Mr. Wells will move his family soon to the ranch just below town.

Sheriff Gets His Man.
 Sheriff George McDuffee was notified a short time ago that one Virgil Clemon was wanted on a statutory charge by authorities at North Yakima. Following out the description of the man, Mr. McDuffee located him placed him under arrest and took him to Arlington Sunday, where he was turned over to the sheriff from North Yakima. Clemon has been working for some time at the Alfalfa Lawn Dairy.

PREVENTION WILL BE CHEAPER THAN A CURE.

The inevitable has happened. It had been predicted for a long time and every one knew it was just as sure to come as anything. No one knew who it would be that would have to suffer the negligence of others and take on the cognomen of the "goat" so to speak. Unfortunately it was an elderly woman, a woman whose financial circumstances are not of the well-to-do class. She works for a living, or at least she did work for a living before she was unfortunate enough to suffer serious injuries while walking over one of the board walks of Main street. A rib was broken and she suffered physical and mental anguish. Will there be a damage suit? No, probably not, as the city will be willing to make an equitable settlement and the woman injured is not of the unreasonable sort. But what will happen when the next victim of civic negligence goes down to his or her bed, may be with a worse injury than a broken rib? At the best it will be costly business for our city. Dilatory property owners should be forced to take out their old rickety walks. Better no walks at all than to continually jeopardize the health and safety of our citizens, if not their lives.

ANITA STEWART, FILM STAR WEARS MANY GOWNS

Famous Beauty Has Large Wardrobe in "Combat"

There is no player on the screen today who wears gowns more effectively than Anita Stewart, who has been called "America's daintiest actress" in "The Combat," the Blue Ribbon Feature released by the Vitagraph Company and which is the headliner at the Star Theater on Sunday and Monday. Miss Stewart wears a series of charming garments.

When she first makes her appearance she is dressed in a bright sport costume. The short full skirt is made from a scarlet striped material, while the silk sweater is also of a brilliant hue.

The dance frock which she wears at her debut bespeaks of gay Paree. Fashioned with a short full skirt of flesh color chiffon it is trimmed with a series of bands of the same color taffeta. These bands encircle the low cut waist as well as the skirt and a large crushed band forms the high girde.

An opera cloak which dainty Anita also wears is of black taffeta with a large white fox collar. This outer garment covers a beautiful evening gown of white spangles.

Her negligees, too, are lovely. One wrap which she wears in the seclusion of her dainty boudoir is a delicate yellow crepe de chine with a large collar, forming a panel down the back of old lace. The morning cap which she wears with this negligee is fashioned entirely of pastel shaded silk flowers encircling the ruffle.

Virginia Norden who plays the role of Miss Stewart's mother, also wears a number of attractive costumes. One evening gown which she wears is made from a deep blue chiffon with long streamers of blue spangles falling from a wide girde.

A beautiful coat which is worn is a deep grey chiffon broadcloth with a high collar of squirrel and deep cuffs and a band about the bottom to correspond. With this coat Miss Stewart carries a round muff and wears a little turban hat of old rose, trimmed with flowers of satin about the crown.

As the wife of the Governor, the gowns which this popular little miss wears are extremely beautiful. One in particular is made with a black chiffon skirt formed by a series of ruffles and large puffs over the hips of black satin. The waist is black chiffon over silver lace, cut very low. Another dress is a rose crepe de chine with old gold lace and trimmed with fur, while all the walking suits and
