LILLIAN WALKER
in "The Kid"

The Kid, a sprightly Miss of seven-teen, is overjoyed at receiving an appointment on the staff of the New York Herald, through the influence of Joe Hazard, the star reporter, who has brought her up as his daughter. To arm her properly for the battle of life, Joe tells her the story of how her mother's downfall was brought about. Her mother, he tells her, was betrayed by a man named Dunster in her home town. Joe had befriended her and when her child (The Kid) was born, and the mother died, Joe had decided to bring the child up himself. With a final warning to beware the pitfalls of the great city, Joe takes her to the Herald office to begin her career.

Soon after, when the price of meat shows an alarming rise, the Herald assigns the Kid to unearth the cause, and thus save the lives of the countless children of the slums whose parents would have been unable to purchase meat at the increased price. While on the hunt for particulars, the Kid sees Robinson, one of the large cattle owners of the West who has come to the city for a business trip. She follows him, waits while he has his shoes shined and then, when turning a corner, loses him in the crowd. Hurrying home, she assumes the disguise of a bootblack and obtains a position at the stand where she had left Robinson. True to her expectations, Robinson appears that day, and while shining his shoes she hits on a clue. That day, Robinson's wife, a charity worker, is murdered while riding in her car, and the murderer makes good his escape. Sometime later, the Kid manages to obtain a position in the office of Robinson and gets evidence which she believes him not only connected with the manipulation of the meat market, but also with the murder of his wife. She arranged to have two detectives planted in the room next day to get further evidence of his connection with the murder, but they overhear a conversation which convinces them that Hildaigo, manager of Robinson's cattle enterprises is the real murderer and he is taken into custody. The Kid also swears out a warrant for Robinson for his connection with the rise in meat but Joe Hazard, seeing and recognizing Robinson, tells the Kid that he is her own father, Dunster, under an assumed name. Dunster also learns that the Kid is his daughter and begs leniency. She finally secures his freedom after exacting a promise from him to devote a portion of the money he has unlawfully gained to charity, but when he comes to claim a daughter's love, she turns to one who has been her "daddy" for all these years and leaves Dunster a broken-hearted man. Sunday and Monday at the Star Theatre.

Coming to Star Theater Friday and Saturday is "The Saintly Sinner," another Bluebird photoplay. The excellent reputation this series of picture dramas has established will be cleverly maintained in the new attraction. "The Saintly Sinner" will be a play out of the ordinary, based upon uncommon theories and worked out with well sustained interest to the very end. Ruth Stonehouse, who will be pleasurably recalled as the star of "Love Never Dies," an earlier Bluebird, will be the heroine of the story with Jack Mulhall appearing as her leading man. Very sensational and exciting will be the episodes in the "Saintly Sinner" and screen fans who like excitement to attend their hour at the theater will be abundantly supplied with thrills in the rapid action and surprises the play affords.

Old Timer Makes Visit.

Among the many old time residents of Morrow county who were here to attend the fair was W. H. Hayes of Pendleton. Mr. Hayes is now farming in the Umatilla wheat section and is meeting with success. At the present time he has nine thousand sacks of wheat in the warehouse awaiting sale. Mr. Hayes came over primarily to put through a deal for a wheat ranch in the Black Horse country. If successful in the transaction, he will place his son Robert on the ranch. Mr. Hayes lived in Morrow county about twenty-three years ago, owning a ranch on upper Hinton creek, which he sold to D. Cox.

J. H. Estes and M. J. Estes were registered at the Palace hotel last Thursday from "Let'er Buck."
