GIRL FIGHTS TEMPTATION IN "THE NEGLECTED WIFE"

The story of a girl's pitiful fight against the temptations of the world is vividly pictured in the third episode of "The Neglected Wife," Pathe's big serial featuring Ruth Roland, which will be shown at the Star Theatre tonight and tomorrow. This episode which is entitled "In the Crucible," opens with Ruth Roland, in the role of Margaret Warner and Roland Bottomley as Horace Kennedy, the attorney, comparing anonymous notes they have received, threatening exposure if their relations are continued.

"You are right—we must not see each other again," Kennedy tells the girl and she agrees. Worried over her husband's growing indifference, Mrs. Kennedy has gone to their house-boat, out of town, for a rest. There she has met Frank Norwood, a magazine editor and an old acquaintance. Norwood has received from Margaret a story entitled "His Wife and the Other Woman." He expresses a desire to meet Miss Warner and is pleased to learn that Mrs. Kennedy has already made her acquaintance. He accepts the story for publication and mails Margaret a check for $100. Margaret disheartened by her fortune and disheartened by the return of other stories, finds herself unable to pay her board bill. The landlady refuses to listen to her explanation and threatens her arrest. Jimmy, a boarder, seeking to take advantage of the situation, offers to pay Margaret's bill. Infuriated, she snatches the money from his hand and throws it out of the window. While the landlady, highly indignant over this insult to her star boarder, rushes out for a policeman, Margaret makes a sensational escape by climbing out of the window by means of a sheet, torn into strips and tied to the bed post. Alone and disheartened, she spends the night in the Salvation Army headquarters and the next day starts a search for work. She encounters a friend who tells her that he is manager in a local department store and offers her a position. It happens that Jimmy is employed in the same store. He and the manager start a fight over Margaret. Jimmy finding himself bested, pulls a revolver and fires several shots which cause a panic. In the rush to escape, the high stairway collapses and many people are hurt. Jimmy seeking to dodge the blame, places the gun at Margaret's side.

A spectator, however, comes to the rescue of the unfortunate girl and Jimmy flees in an automobile, pursued by the police. He dashes wildly along the railroad tracks, leading over a bridge. Just at that moment, the trestle is raised and the automobile plunges into the river, carrying Jimmy with it.

Margaret, a prisoner, is taken to the police station where she is advised to engage an attorney. Will she call on Kennedy to help her?

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION AND ITS TRAIN OF EVIL INFLUENCES

Constant Over-Exertion and Anxiety Cause Lowered Physical and Nervous Vitality and Make Easy Victims of the Army of Nervous Diseases.

Our nervous system is facing a period of great physical activity and mental anxiety and it is well to direct attention to the army of nervous diseases which may assail us under such circumstances and, as well, to tell how to avoid and overcome them. It is a fact—although not understood by many—that osteopathy has wonderful efficiency in preventing and overcoming nervous complaints. The reasons for this become quite clear and logical when principles and methods of the science and practice are comprehended.

The "Why" of Nervous Diseases, and How Osteopathy Rescues and Restores Those Afflicted With Such Complaints is Briefly but Clearly Explained.

To guard one's self against nervous collapse it is first necessary to understand the why of such a catastrophe. Such an explanation in simple language that you will understand appears in Osteopathic Health for July, a copy of which can be obtained from any osteopathic physician free of charge.

This July issue of the magazine also tells about many of the diseases which result from nerve depletion among them being Neurasthenia—the disease to which so many people in the United States fall victims—Hemiplegia, a form of Paralysis affecting one-half of the body; Facial and Occupational Paralysis; Nervous Indigestion, St. Vitus' Dance, Sciatica, Neuritis, Goitre and Epilepsy. Osteopathy does wonders in these widely differing cases. If you want to know the truth about it, investigate! Don't follow blind prejudice; get the facts for yourself. Secure a copy of Osteopathic Health regularly. It is issued monthly for your information and benefit. Ask any osteopathic physician for a copy. He will be glad to supply you. Ask him to tell you about cases he has experienced in his practice. Health is a great blessing; a great asset; it is what makes life worth living. If you have the will to be well, health may be within your reach. Do not let prejudice cheat you of your birthright. Get a copy of Osteopathic Health and learn about this new system of healing.

Jas. G. Doherty, Blackhorse farmer, was in Heppner Saturday afternoon, accompanied by his daughter. Mr. Doherty is able to get about some by the use of crutches but his leg is for from being well yet. He has been confined to bed for about six weeks but thinks now that he is able to move about some he will begin to improve more rapidly.

Grover Goff was in from Gurdane Saturday. His hay crop was good this season and he states that stock will get through the winter all right in his section as there appears to be no scarcity of feed. The grass is coming on and the fall range is good.

Your friends can buy anything you can give them—except your photograph.

Notwithstanding the soaring costs of all commodities during the past three years, prices of photographs have not risen. The necessity of a readjustment of values, however, is self evident.

Beginning November first, prices must be raised from twenty to thirty-five per cent.

Compared with the difference that exists in the prices of practically all staple articles, this increase is small indeed, and will remain permanent only to the extent that other values are stationary.
