USE OF PRUNING AND TILLAGE IN ORCHARDS

Problem of Proper Balance in Nutrition for Economical Production to be Solved at Pruning School.

Corvallis, Ore., Dec. 4—Is it cheaper in your orchard to adjust the plant food supply to stimulate growth by pruning out or by supplying additional nitrates in fertilizer, tillage, cover crops? This is one of the questions that orchardists taking the pruning school work at O. A. C. next week, Dec. 10 to 15, will be helped to answer.

How pruning helps to adjust the delicate balance requisite to growth of tree and fruit production will be explained by Dr. E. J. Kraus, who has just completed one of a series of important investigations along these lines. A vast fund of interesting, practical and new information has been discovered and some of it will be announced for the first time in the pruning course.

"Not knowing the relation between pruning and nutrition," says Dr. Kraus, "we have pruned largely by blind faith that somehow it would pay. But sometimes it did not, and in addition to this disappointment was the loss of time and labor. The new plan is practical, for it helps us to make just the form of investment that will produce the biggest returns, which is all we mean by practical."

This new knowledge of plant control for growth and fruiting applies as well to garden plants as to orchard trees, because it is fundamental. It shows how tender plants toughen when carbohydrates accrue in excess, and how literally to "take the starch out of them."

Other big features of the course are how to keep worms out of apples, how to control scab and blight, and how to protect the fruit and obtain growth by pruning, tillage, and fertilizer, from the ravages on insect and disease enemies.

Burton H. Peek, of Sagenhurst Farm, Rhea creek, was in town on Monday. Mr. Peek has been doing some seedling on the Peek farm near Lexington and states that the recent

H. V. Gates, president of Heppner Light & Water Co., is here this week from his home at Terrebonne, Oregon, attending to business interests of his company.
