One German Had Right Idea.

A dispatch in the daily papers gives an account of the capture of a German soldier. After his capture he donned a Red Cross grassard and helped bring in American wounded. German snipers shot at him, and this so enraged him that he grabbed a captured machine gun and returned their fire, dropping two Huns from a tree.

ART OF HOME DRYING

Portland, Aug. 13.—We have made our war gardens veritable munition plants. We must now make every pantry and household store-room an arsenal for the storage of these munitions of war," urges the United States Food Administration.

"Home drying is by no means a new art. It was used by our grandmothers in saving apples, peaches, pears and kindred fruits for winter use. Until recently, however, the practice of this form of household conservation has been given little application by the present generation. The ease with which the housekeeper could procure canned goods from the grocer served to discourage the use of this fine old custom, and dried products found little favor. Perhaps something less than a world war might have caused its revival and expansion, but the fact remains that it was not given serious consideration until civilization was plunged into the whirlpool of strife. With the outbreak of the war and the attendant food shortage, fruit drying was revived throughout America, and with it came the stimulus for vegetable drying as well. Today vegetables are being dried in the homes of this country on a scale never before approached, and it is constantly increasing.

As in the matter of home-canning, the people of the United States are giving practical application to the urgent plea of the United States Food Administration. For home canners the watchword is 'Back up the cannon by the use of the canners.' For home driers it finds expression in the constant plea to 'Fight the foe with the Dreadnaught and Drier!' The national benefit of this progress in enhancing the staying powers of the home grown food supply is very great.

As a means of providing for winter food needs the importance of fruit drying is given special emphasis this year by the scarcity of sugar. Mr. Hoover states that the sugar shortage is a real problem at this time. To save fruits by drying prevents tying up sugar which is needed to meet immediate demands. This gives an added impetus to the need for drying fruits as well as vegetables.

Eat less sweet food. Put less sugar in tea and coffee and dissolve completely what you use. Use less on cereals. Do not frost cakes. Eat less candy. Use other sweeteners, such as maple syrup, honey etc.

Instead of sugar for cooking and with cereals, hot cakes etc.

War is scraping our sugar bins and our granaries. The less we eat the longer it will take to empty them. It's up to us.

PROFITABLE DAIRYING

At a recent meeting of the Oregon Dairymen's Association, C. L. Smith, agriculturist of the O-W. R. R. & N. Co., was one of the speakers. Preceding his address, there were a number of speakers, and they expressed the opinion that dairying was no longer profitable.

Mr. Smith took an opposite view. He said that after fifty years association with the dairy interests of the country, and a careful study of conditions from the Atlantic to the Pacific, he had failed to find a place where the right kind of a cow, and the right kind of a man, combined with the right kind of land failed to give satisfactory results.

Dairymen are commercializing the industry. They buy their feed, hire men to do the work and expect a profit. Now they are asking the government to regulate the price of feed and to raise the price of milk.

Butter is retailing at 55 cents per pound. This is exorbitant. The wholesale price of butter, should be based on the wholesale price of its ingredients, which is 35 cents per pound. This would leave the wholesaler a handsome profit at 40 cents per pound, or even less.

The trouble is that the dairymen are not giving their personal attention to the business. They are letting the hired man do the work, and he is apathetic.

No country in the world is better adapted to dairying than the Pacific Northwest. Pasturing cows and buying feed is wrong. When one acre of land properly utilized for soiling crops will feed four times the number of cows that the same area will feed if used as a pasture.

If the dairyman will cull out the boarders in his herd and raise his feed, he will have no ground for complaint. Intelligent, practical, profitable dairying is the marketing of well-grown forage, grain and root crops in the form of milk and butter.

He was on the road during the rain, arriving at Heppner late Monday evening, and was stricken the following morning with pneumonia, complicated with tubercular trouble.
