Indian Names.

The Indians up in the far North country call the beaver ah-mick, says Dan Beard in Boys' Life, the boy scouts' magazine. By the way, when boy scouts lay out their council grounds at camp and divide it up as it should be, according to the north, south, east and west winds around the circle, they should remember that the Indian name for north is Quiewed-nong, for south is Show-neln-nong, for east is Waba-nong, and for west is Gable-a-nong.

Now, you know the Indian ceremony always begins with blowing the smoke of the pipe to the four winds, and then to the sky, which is O'qule, and then to the earth, which is A'kee, and the warrior lights his pipe with Skoo-day, that is, with fire, but if he is tow-neekie with the Skoo-day he starts a forest fire (tow-neekie means careless).

To be a good scout, one must never be tow-neekie; to be patriotic one must never be tow-neekie.

Barriers' Wigs.

Barristers' wigs first came into vogue about 200 years ago. Up to the end of the seventeenth century judges and sergeants at law alone had any distinctive dress.

Under Queen Anne the queen's counselor adopted the court dress and silk gown which made up the mourning of the period, together with the full-bottomed wig then usually worn by all persons of position.

Thereupon the outer bar started wearing a modest short wig, with strings of horsehair tied up at the end, in imitation of the fashion of tying the back hair up into a pigtail.

Some judges, we are told by a legal historian, found these wigs "comical," and would not allow barristers wearing them to plead in court. —London Chronicle.

The Height of Good Taste is displayed by men of refinement—more in what they leave off in their dress than what they put on. And a shirt can make or mar your appearance.

There are some shirts that have an air of quiet elegance—a certain exquisite refinement—a "something" hard to define but nevertheless very real.

When you put one on you know you're well dressed in this respect—just as well dressed as it is possible to be.

Beau Brummel Shirts

are made with extreme care. The cloths are tested for fastness of color as well as for strength. The collar bands are cut with steel dies—always exactly the right size.

Every operator who works on these shirts is the graduate of a "sewing school" maintained by the factory. A dozen other little details make for perfection in fine shirts.

If you will come to the store and see the Beau Brummel Shirt we will be grateful. We shall not press you to buy—but we do urge you to get acquainted with this supreme shirt.
