DEMOCRATIC PARTY NEEDS

count of the resentment of the American people for his failure to take into the councils on foreign affairs Republicans as well as Democrats. It is true that there are some Republicans who are not in sympathy with Mr. Wilson's ideas, but many Republicans would be, if taken into the President's confidence.

Close friends of the President believe it is his duty, at least, to call into confidence Republicans of all shades of opinion and lay before them the programme he intends to pursue at the peace conference.

The last suggestion probably will not please the President, but the time is past when friends of Mr. Wilson out of mere respect for his likes and dislikes, can afford to remain silent. One of the most curious features of the situation is that some of the men with whom I have talked do not feel that they can very well tell Mr. Wilson the truth. Some of them would be willing to tell him the truth about his loss of prestige in this country if he only gave them audience. Others would just as soon write him their views, and some have done so. But the majority of President Wilson's friends are talking among themselves of the necessity of bringing forcibly to Mr. Wilson's attention that he is drifting away from the original precepts of openness and managing the Government in a personal and private way which does not square with his professions of democracy.

Perhaps the most severe criticism heard is of Mr. Wilson's decision to go to Europe at this critical time. Nobody begrudges the President a great part in the settlement of the peace of the world, nor his remarkable influence in bringing victory to the Allies; but the feeling of the men who are fond of the President and who have the courage to tell correspondents how they feel is that he created the American people with indifference when he failed in his first announcement to tell the exact purpose of his journey and the provision he planned to make for the transaction of public business in his absence.

The revolt inside the Democratic party is not of recent origin. It has been growing for several months, and may explain the lukewarm activity of many Democratic national committeemen in the recent election, many of whom felt a large part of the Republican criticism of the record of the Democratic Congress was absolutely true, and that it was useless to try to make the people think otherwise.

Mr. Wilson is considering the appointment of peace delegates. Some of the names mentioned have rankled in the minds of disinterested friends who want to see America represented by broad-minded and able men, instead of the same type of provincialism which has caused dissatisfaction throughout the country before. President Wilson may not know it, but the morale of his friends is at low ebb. There is no one but himself on whom responsibility can be placed, and no one but himself who can restore the confidence of the people in him at a time when he must needs tell European statesmen, skilled in the bargaining methods of the Old World diplomats, that he speaks for a united America, which doesn't want to see selfishness supersede a spirit of justice at the peace table, and is particularly anxious that the sacrifices America has made shall not have been made in vain.

SCHOOL SUPT. REPORT

finally to Washington, D. C., where it was put in the permanent exhibit as a sample of thrift work. Two local institutes were held last year which were well attended and much interest manifested.

The Spanish flu stopped our Annual Institute, in place of which, we propose holding two or three one day institutes, during the year.

A three day institute means the loss of a week in some districts and we feel that time must be saved in order to complete the years' work.

I hope the time is not far distant when our teachers will vote for the training school to take the place of a three day institute. I believe they will get more practical help. We would still have the lectures that we have at the Institutes. And in addition the teacher could take an active part in the discussions and exchange ideas.

Owing to the scarcity of teachers some of our schools were late in opening, but work is in full force now, and all together the school affairs of Morrow county are quite promising.

We have but one parent teachers' association in the county. This is an important factor in its district, and as soon as war activities cease more will be organized.

We have divided the county into zones and hope to have a number of community meetings before the close of school.

The children's exhibit at the County Fair was creditable, but more than half of it was lost in transportation to the State Fair which was a great disappointment because we felt assured of holding our place in Eastern Oregon if not capturing first prize.

Died of Wounds.

Paul Bucknum, former employe of the Eagle died of wounds in France. His mother at Heppner was notified a few weeks ago that her son had been wounded. They proved fatal. Paul Bucknum spent his boyhood in Canyon, and a few years ago with his parents moved to Baker.—Blue Mountain Eagle. The death of Paul Bucknum was confirmed in the casualty list in the Oregonian of Monday. Paul was a native Heppner boy.

Miss Barker at Stanfield.

Miss Beulah Barker has been engaged to teach in the Stanfield school for the remainder of this school year. When the town of Stanfield was started, nine years ago, Miss Barker was one of the first teachers in the schools there.—Echo News.

Maybe nobody ever loved you and maybe nobody ever will, but so long as too many people don't hate you, you'll get along as well as the average.
