WALLA WALLA READY FOR TRACTOR SHOW

Walla Walla, Wash., April 21. (Special)—Walla Walla is ready to entertain the thousands of visitors expected in the city for the tractor and power farming demonstration April 23, 24 and 25. The home owners of Walla Walla have thrown wide their doors to the Commercial club's housing committee with the result that Walla Walla will be able to take care of 20,000 visitors daily.

The big 600-acre Yenney ranch where the tractor and truck demonstrations will be held is close to the city. Transportation will be by automobile and more than 200 Walla Walla citizens have donated their cars for the event. This will enable visitors to reach the grounds rapidly and return at their convenience.

Many exhibits already have been received in Walla Walla and there is hardly a day but what some new type of truck or tractor is seen on the streets of the city. Local dealers planning exhibits have their equipment on hand for the event and great tents have been rented in Seattle, Spokane and Portland to cover displays of truck and tractor accessories.

One huge tent will be used to display power equipment for the farm home where the farmer's wife will find all that is new and modern in farm labor saving devices. Within a very few days all of the many department heads of the Oregon Agriculture college, the state college at Pullman, Washington, and the University of Idaho will be in Walla Walla to participate in the event. So will be county engineers and county agricultural agents from over the Northwest. Acting Governor Harbo will be in Walla Walla for the show on April 24, and other prominent state officials plan to take part in the demonstration.

The program for the event calls for many features of interest to the farmer. The three days will be given over to demonstrations of round wheel and the track laying type of tractors. Farm trucks will be loaded to their capacity and tried out under various conditions including severe tests on soft ground.

Private and public instruction in the operation, care and upkeep of tractors and trucks will be a daily feature at the show. Discing, plowing, seeding and harrowing by power machinery also will be demonstrated.

The big Yenney ranch offers every condition faced by farmers of the Northwest and was selected by the general committee after a tour of the country lasting nearly three weeks. Secretary Fetterman reports more than 150 exhibitors with a belief that additional exhibitors will come in the last few days previous to the opening of the demonstrations.

GRAIN CORPORATION MAY HANDLE WHEAT GUARANTEE

Secretary of Agriculture Notifies Director of Extension That Present Policy Is Best.

Carrying out the guaranteed wheat price agreement of the United States is to be left in the hands of the federal grain corporation; unless President Wilson designates the department of agriculture as the handling agency, says a recent notice to O. D. Center, director of O. A. C. extension.

The secretary of agriculture believes the grain corporation is best fitted by organization and experience to go ahead and close up the work. The guarantee act seems to assume that this should be continued. It would be difficult for any other agency to set up machinery for handling the matter, and a great deal of duplication would be bound to result.

"The task is of great magnitude and the time till the 1919 crop begins to move is short," the secretary tells Director Center.

The secretary has cabled the president urging continued use of the grain corporation, but says that if the president desires the department to handle the guarantee it will assume the task and do the best it can.

HIGHWAY WILL BENEFIT EASTERN OREGON

Though it is a fact not generally known, Tillamook County, the most productive dairying section of the State of Oregon, has to ship in hay and other forage for its dairy herds. On this account farmers of Eastern Oregon profited to the extent of $100,000 in 1918. While the Tillamook section and the coast country in general boast as fertile soil as can be found anywhere the grasses grown there are not converted into winter fodder, for the reason that the product is more valuable for grazing dairy cattle.

Tillamook County was not the only coast county that proved to be a good customer of the alfalfa raisers of the irrigated lands of Eastern Oregon. All the rest of the seven coast counties purchased hay as well, though in smaller quantities.

The proposed Roosevelt highway along the coast would open up a great agricultural empire in that region, and in a few years millions of dollars would flow out to the hay producers where now only hundreds of thousands are spent by the dairy men.

In 1918 Tillamook County sold throughout the United States $2,000,000 worth of cheese and dairy products alone. This gives an inkling of what will be the result if millions of acres of land like that in Tillamook are opened up to cultivation and settlement through the medium of the Roosevelt highway. Based on what has been shown in Tillamook County, $100,000,000 worth of taxable property would be added to the wealth of the state if the rest of the coast region is developed in like manner.

Grass is green every day of the year on the ocean side of the coast range of mountains, and the climate is so mild that the cattle do not need to be fed, as in other dairy sections of the United States, notably in the middle west and on the Atlantic seaboard, but, as has been stated already, it has been found more profitable to keep the land sowed down to clover pasturage for the dairy herds than to raise hay thereon. That is why the coast country will always be a great market for Eastern Oregon hay.
