IT'S THE EARLY GARDENER GETS THE EARLY GREENS

Crowers Clean Up, Fertilize and Plow Tracts, Prepare and Plant Early Patches.

Oregon Agricultural College, April 30.—The good gardener takes advantage of the growing season preferred by the different garden crops, and plants each in its best season. He has already cleaned up, fertilized and plowed most of his spring garden land, and prepared and planted the areas devoted to those crops that flourish best in the cool season.

"Get good seed or stocky transplants for these early crops," says A. G. Bouquet, professor of vegetable gardening. "The young plants will have to stand some pretty stormy weather and should be given a strong start. The difference in the cost of good seed and poor is almost nothing in comparison with the difference in the value of the crops they produce."

Among the plants now in the ground are peas, lettuce, early cabbage, kale for the chickens, radishes and turnips, onion sets and possibly the first sowing of seed onions. Spinach and a little early mustard to go with it, is up and fast making early greens. The first sowing of beets and carrots are beginning to show, and will do much better than late sowings.

Plants of the mustard family—cabbage, kale, radishes and turnips—not only grow best in cool, moist weather, but stand a better chance to be large enough to get past the danger stage before the maggot flies arrive in quantity.

Tender plants from the hot bed—tomatoes, celery, peppers, egg plants and such—are not field-set till danger of heavy frost is past. Professor Bouquet advocates about May 15 for field setting of tomatoes in the Corvallis district. "Better leave them in the hot bed to grow rapidly than put them in the field to dwarf and possibly get killed," is his recommendation.
