PLAN MERCHANT MARINE TO LEAD ENTIRE WORLD

Chairman Greene, of House Committee, Says U. S. Must Take Advantage of Opportunities.

Washington, D. C.—That the United States is to become one of the greatest ship building nations in the world and that the Republicans will put legislation through Congress which will enable her to command the seas with her merchant marine, is the prediction made by Representative William E. Greene, of Massachusetts, chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, which has been considering legislation to that end.

"Already we have lost valuable time and must move swiftly if we are to take the place in the world's markets which some of our leading industrial competitors have been forced to abandon," he declared. "If we do it now we can establish ourselves so firmly that we cannot be dislodged upon the full return of peace.

"The Shipping Board has recommended private ownership as a fundamental policy for commercial shipping. The Government should therefore contemplate retirement from commercial ship-building, ship-owning and ship-operating activities at the earliest date practicable, in order, first, to give our overseas trade the full benefit of competitive service, and second, to impart to present and prospective steamship operators that confidence which they must feel before they can be expected to place orders for new ships, without which the outlook for our shipbuilding industry will not be encouraging."

Mr. Greene said that with a view to paying the way for further shipping development, the committee has recommended legislation canceling the powers of the President over shipping, ending the dual control of the President and the Shipping Board, repealing the power to control ocean freights and charges, arranging for the sale of the government-built ships, and regulating the terms of mortgages and payments by the purchasers, all with a view to encouraging private enterprise. Mr. Greene believes this legislation will be a great stimulant to the shipping industry.

"America must act quickly if it is to compete successfully with other nations," he continued. "If we act intelligently there is not the slightest doubt that we shall become one of the leading ship-building nations in the world. We will have the largest number of ship yards, the material and labor, and when our ship-building plants are completed we will not only produce ships to enable us to lead the commerce of the world, but will build ships in such large numbers and at such prices that we will become the Mecca of the ship-building trade of the world."
