THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Bernice Woodson School District
No. 1, Class B.Roosevelt was one of our greatest Americans and universally beloved.
He was simple and direct. That was what appealed to people. He did not try to make himself great.
He was above doing anything mean and has been classed with the noblest in all history. He understood our people and was interested in the country and everything in it, farming, manufacturing, hunting and all.
Labor and Capital were brought to a better understanding under him than ever before. He believed in the payment of good wages and a square deal.He built up a better army and navy and thought, that a war prepared for was often a war avoided and it was better to be prepared for a war and not have it than to have a war and not be prepared. He was far seeing and it was this that made Dewey's victory at Manila possible.He was a great believer in preparedness and did not move to make the world see what the United States stood for than any other president.
He believed in military training for all, and said a man who refused his service to the limit of his mental and physical ability when his nation calls, whether in peace or war is not fit to be a citizen.It was impossible for Theodore Roosevelt to be neutral in the face of wrong. He has been the most inspiring character in national life since Lincoln.

He had a great fondness for cartoons and could look at them by the hour.His was true Americanism. He saw through the present time to the time when petty politics would be forgotten and the world would be indeed a much better world.He did not believe in socialism but in true Americanism.He loved children and nothing delighted him more than to take them on long walks and call their attention to plants, flowers and birds.

He was a lover of nature and delighted to go out in the woods and visit nature.He was very frail when a boy and they feared he would not live. He came out west to recover his health and was a cowboy on the frontier.
The west understood him better than the east. He appreciated the west, and loved its freedom.He was a firm supporter of the truth. He was not afraid to tell anybody they lied. The people he told they lied came in time to be called the Annanias Club.He hated a molasses and approved of a man who was not afraid to state his opinions and stand by them, a man who had a mind of his own.He was very patriotic and wanted to serve in the recent world war and when he was not allowed to go gave all his sons to the service, one of which, Quentin, never came back.He was a man of determination and a set purpose. In his pictures he almost invariably had his fist clenched.Uncle Sam can look through the strike riots, labor troubles and Un-Americanism and see his American-ism shining like a light through the darkness. Oh, that all Americans were like that! The world would be much nearer perfection than it is today.Roosevelt made mistakes, that he did not deny but everyone makes mistakes but not everyone is as courageous, as true to the right and as willing to do the best he can as Roosevelt. He did the best he could to help America and really accomplished a great deal for his country. We can look at him and say, "There is a real man, simple, sincere and honest. He put his soul in everything he did and we lost a great man when we lost him." Let's you and I do what we can to be like him and follow his example.THEODORE ROOSEVELT THE

Nolan Page, District No. 35, Class B.

Theodore Roosevelt was ambitious but he was unselfish in his ambitions. He was always trying to help the public in any way possible.
He had a many sided character. He was honest. His honesty was complete. There was no changing it.
If one thing was honest and another was not, he would always do the honest thing. He was honest with all men and his conscience.He was sincere in his beliefs, but he was tolerant and if his views were wrong he would change them. He was not hard with people unless occasion demanded, and then not very hard.He was trustful almost to a fault, seeing honesty in others when there was very little there. No one had a fault in his eyes. He did not notice that some of his "friends" were looking out for their own ends and would, if it would help them any, change their views and become some of his bitterest enemies.But his honesty was his outstanding glory. It got him into his public offices and caused the Republican party to, as they call it, "pig-enhole" him. They made him vice-president to get him out of the way and keep him from being president but as it worked out, he got to bepresident within the six months after his election as vice-president.He was very patriotic and he made a good executive. It was his own regret during the last war that he could not be on the firing line, as he was in the Spanish-American war.
It was in that war that he resigned his position of assistant secretary of the navy to form his famous Rough-rider regiment. Although he could not go himself, he sent his four sons to the front where one of them was killed.He had always led a pure life and although, after he began to be important in national life, his political enemies hunted through all his past life they could find nothing but good records.He had a marvelous mind and a strong body. He was a great reader and when he was reading he thought of nothing else but his book. When he read a book he always remembered the contents, no matter how fast he read it, and he could read a page at a glance. He would work out two great problems at the same time.He never complained of his problems or of physical pain although during the latter part of his life he was often ill.He was accurate in his work and expected others to be. He demanded efficiency in all that worked under him. He always answered all letters written to him just as they came, never hastening his mail.He believed in waisting nothing of either mind or body. Every extra movement or working of his mind was dispensed. He contented his mind on all his problems, which enabled him to get them so quickly and thoroughly.He had great foresight, seeing farther ahead than any other man.
He was generous in his views and able to see the other man's point of view as well as his own.He was very democratic and never showed anger. He said that he had a hot temper, but never allowed it to get out of his control. He was always kind to people, courteous, and hospitable and he loved children.He believed that women should vote. He stuck to his principles unless he was proven wrong. He was fearless physically and morally, always having an argument ready on any subject mentioned.Altogether he was one of the greatest Americans in all the the history of the country.

You an' Me Bofe

The wife of a military man advertised for a girl to do general housework. The notice was responded to by a particularly neat and competent young colored woman. The details were soon settled-number in the family, hours for meals, days out, no laundry, how often the drawing room, had to be dusted, when the silver had to be cleaned, etc."What wages do you expect?" asked the housewife."Ah couldn't work for less 'an $50 a month," replied the candidate.

"But Mandy, that's impossible.

My husband is only a first lieutenant, and we can't afford to pay such wages."

"That's too bad," replied the maid.

"But, yo' see, mah husband he's a Lieutenant too, and Ah mus' have that much to keep him goin'!"—New York World.

But not the University

Mrs. Edwin was showing Selma, the new Swedish maid "the ropes."
"This," she said, "is my son's room.""Ya?" Selma's face lit up with sympathetic understanding. "My brudder bin there too?"

"Is that so? What year?"

"Ach, he ban got no year, da judge just say, you Axel, sixty days in yail."—Truth Seeker.
