World's Longest Power Line.

The Southern Sierras Power company of Riverside, California has for sometime past been transmitting a high tension electric current for a distance of 517 miles and doing it successfully.

This line runs from the company's plant in California to Yuma, Arizona. The current is ordinarily brought 239 miles from Yuma to San Bernardino at 57,000 volts and stepped down to 55,000 volts and sent on the remainder of the distance. The flexibility of the system, however, is such that when a transformer recently burnt out in San Bernardino the current was sent the full 517 miles at 55,000 volts during the repairs. This simply shows the unlimited power resources that can be developed here in the west.

The Montana Power company has demonstrated that the heaviest freight and passenger trains on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul can be handled successfully with electricity. The Southern Sierra Power company has demonstrated that distance is no barrier to the transmission of power.

Mr. Howard who built this fine alfalfa ranch out of the old Cluff place, will move onto his smaller tract of land in the edge of Ione, where he and his family will take things easy for a while at least.
