Humor, Pathos and Sentiment Abundant in 'Little Women' Filled with humor, pathos and delicate sentiment, 'Little Women,' the famous novel by Louisa M. Alcott, which has been dramatized and released as a Paramount-Artcraft special picture, will be shown at the Star theater Friday.

It is a lavender scented picture of New England during the days of the Civil War, and its numerous home touches, its bits of romance and its gentle pathos are as effective in the photoplay as they were in the pages of Miss Alcott's wonderful book.

HUMOR FOR FUTURE GENERATIONS

Service Men Are Goats But Find They Can't Thrive On O & C Land Grants at All

Former service men are being made the goats, while looking for homesteads on the O & C land grants in southern Oregon, but unlike the goat of tin can fame, they are finding that making a living on the rolling rock-ribbed hills of Douglas county would drive a jack rabbit to suicide.

"I pulled into this place in one of those tourist trains with the side-door coaches," he said, "with a hunch that I was going to view my farm and become a prosperous citizen within a few months.

"Well he took me out in the sticks a few million miles, I guess it was that far; anyhow, we met a man out there who was coming to vote for Lincoln this fall, and he took me to see some land which on the map was marked level with large gravel.

"The real estate man told me he would locate me on that patch of nowhere for $10, and I told him I wouldn't give him $10 for the whole district—outfit. So he took me to another place. It was marked 'up and down,' but it was mostly up.

"We looked the land over. It was so steep we couldn't even find a place level enough to roll dice on, and if a man wanted to sleep out there he'd have to have one of those California folding cots—the kind you anchor to a tree. If you wanted to keep a woman on that land you'd have to find a Mexican senorita and cut her toe nails short and then take her shoes away from her.

"His experience is the same as hundreds of others. There is one feature which is in favor of Roseburg. The army taught the men to retain their good humor in spite of hardship and disappointments.
