

TRIBUTE PAID TO DEAD

age. The accession of the Southern States was for the avowed purpose of perpetuating that institution with all its terrible horrors, its terrible life dramas, and its prostitution of the constitution and the flag.

No greater inspiration was ever whispered to men to face death upon the battlefield, than the just cause which inspired the men of the North, who wore the blue. No more worthy foe ever measured steel with an adversary, than the men of the South who believed they were fighting for the right, and wore the gray. No more bitter warfare was ever waged than in this unfortunate conflict between men of the same blood. Family ties were broken and severed, and on the fields of carnage brother crossed swords with brother. Hearts were lacerated, extreme bitterness engendered and at the close of the war prediction was freely made that this could never become a united Republic; that the people of the North could not dwell in unity and harmony with the people of the South.

Time has indeed proven these predictions erroneous. The seared wounds of defeat have long since healed. The victors were Americans, and consideration and generosity to the vanquished went far to sweeten the bitter cup.

On the death of General Grant the great chieftain of the Union forces, in 1885, the men who wore the gray were proud to escort his body on its last pilgrimage to the banks of the Hudson, and stood shoulder to shoulder and mingled their tears of sorrow and grief with those of the men who wore the blue, about the open grave, as the great soldier was laid to his final rest.

During the recent world war the son of the soldier of the Confederacy fought shoulder to shoulder with the son of the Union soldier of the North in a common cause, and today grateful hearts and hands are placing flowers of love and appreciation on the graves of the many who remain sleeping side by side in Flanders' field.

Soldiers of the Grand Army, I know of no more fitting term by which to address you than that employed by Daniel Webster when at the dedication of the Bunker Hill Monument in 1825. He addressed the veterans of the American Revolution as "Venerable Men who have come down to us from a former generation."

To my mind nothing is more beautiful, more touching to our most tender emotions than the scene we witness at this time.

For more than fifty years these venerable men have on each Memorial Day unfurled the Stars and Stripes so valiantly borne by them throughout four years of terrible warfare, years of suffering, privation, danger and death, and gathered about the graves of their comrades who had responded "here" to the final roll call of the Supreme Commander. In love and tenderness to plant there their country's flag and place there on the fragrant blossoms that are but emblematic of their deepest emotions.

Each year has counted a depletion of their ranks, each year the Supreme Command has taken its inevitable toll from their roster.

Venerable men, some of whom bear the honored scars of battle, whose heads are whitened, whose steps have grown faltering, whose lips are withered, but in whose hearts unquenchable burn the fires of patriotism.

Venerable men, who now live largely in the past, whose shadows are fast falling to the East, when they, too, shall have answered "here" to that final roll call, when they shall have rejoined those of their comrades who found their way to Heaven on the field of battle. I would chisel on the granite that shall mark the eternal repose of their ashes, in the language of Napoleon, "Died on the field of honor."

At the conclusion of the program, the procession led to the cemetery, where the Knights of Pythias lodge members held services for departed brothers, and friends and relatives decorated the graves. Members of I. O. O. F. attended in a body.

Strikes It Rich Then Takes Bride

Romance connecting North and South America has come to light through the marriage of Stanley Montjoy to Millicent Lee, of Albany, N. Y. It appears that the young people have been long engaged, but it was not until recently that Stanley struck it rich in South America, where he and his brother Jim have been engaged in working a claim and thus enabled him to marry the girl of his choice. Bob Davis, an old friend of the groom was best man.

Doesn't this suggest the beginning of a good newspaper yarn—well it is more than that. It is the partial plot of a new Paramount picture—"Happy Though Married" in which Enid Bennett will appear at the Star theater next Sunday. Thomas H. Ince produced the picture and Miss Bennett's husband, Fred Niblo, directed the production. The rest of the story takes the spectator through a maze of jealousy, mystery, humor, suspense and final reconciliation. And a book on marriage is the basis of a lot of the trouble.

Elsie Mae Gordon Returning to Chautauquas

In every line of human endeavor there are those who naturally excel—Miss Gordon is one of these. She has made a careful study of the genuine Southern Negro and her crowning impersonation of a "before-the-war mammy" is accredited the best thing of its kind on the platform. You are swept from laughter to tears and marvel at the ability of this slip of a girl. From the pathos of the anatomy you are transported with incredible reality into the joys and sorrows of childhood, for Miss Gordon impersonates a child as few ever have been able to do.

The Chautauqua management is justly proud of the privilege of presenting Miss Gordon on the opening night.

Bend, Ore.—Who wants juniper shavings? The management of the pencil factory here has appealed to the state chamber of commerce to induce a mattress manufacturer to establish himself in Deschutes county and take over the excelsior waste from the mill.

Portland, Ore.—It sounds like down, but it's made of metal—the furniture that forms the output of the Alhambra Manufacturing company. The plant, which has been in operation here the past two years making hospital equipment and other metallic furniture, is planning a pre-ferred stock issue and expects to acquire the property it is now on and erect a new building.
