Judge Stapleton on Market Bill

Co-operative marketing, such as has been successfully carried on in California, was suggested as a remedy for work of the non-partisan league by Circuit Judge Stapleton in his talk on Thursday before the Press Club, on "The Non-Partisan League and Co-operative Marketing." Judge Stapleton decried the practice of giving graduates of the agricultural college positions as farm agents, industrial club leaders, and county agriculturists, before they have been sent back to the farm to put into practice what they have learned.

allowed saying in distance between Spokane and Portland is fanciful. Almost every part of the state is crying for the construction of roads. There is complaint that so few roads have been completed and the people are beginning to despair of success in our road building program. It would not take much to produce feeling of reaction that would work great harm to the cause of good highways. The plain course for the state is to finish at least some of the projects it has started and give our home people some service before trying to build any boulevards to the moon.—Pendleton East Oregonian.

much about, reminds us of the old story of the empty barrel. What? You've heard it, brother! Well, then you know what we mean.

Henry Ford led the way. Henry may have his faults, but who will deny that he has his virtues. And best of all, with the decrease in the price of his flivvers he announces that wages to his employes will remain at their present level.

The farmer who had his summer-fallow free from weeds when the fall seeding season arrived, was indeed a fortunate fellow. We notice that a large number of farmers have entered the fields with their drills, which proves that good farming is becoming the rule. At that, the labor problem has been a handicap which the best of farmers have been almost unable to overcome.

A man was speaking in behalf of Senator Harding the other day and someone arose with the remark that they believed the old man was crazy. Well, if such be the case, we are hoping there will be a lot of "nuts" on or about November 2.

The price of wool, or no price at all, may be attributed to the present administration. Maybe not. But it will be a hard situation to explain to local woolgrowers who saw foreign wool sold on the Boston market in preference to their own. In fact all producers in this country are beginning to look with more and more favor upon a strong protective tariff and the idea of "America First" is making a strong appeal.
