

BEDROOM FARCE COMING TO HEPPNER SOON

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," an hilarious version of Broadway Success.

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" the screw farce which sets forth the tribulations and misadventures of a model husband who won his wife under a false pretense of devilishness, is scheduled for its first local showing Tuesday, October 12, at the Star theater.

For one of the longest and most hilarious seasons a comedy has ever run, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," written by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, and produced in the theatre by A. H. Woods, convulsed New York; and those who had the opportunity of seeing pre-released showings of the production in pictures, with an all-star cast, assert that the play has gained rather than lost in hilarity in the translation to the silver sheet.

The situation—or at least the central situation, for there are any number of them—deals with Reggie Irvine who for many years had sought to win Angelica. This young woman wanted a man just the opposite of what her own name implied. She wanted a wild one, and since Reggie had no idea of how to be wild, had no inclinations toward sowing even a little patch of the unfamed oats, he performed sought outside aid. He went to Polly Hathaway, society reporter on the scandal sheet, and asked her to use dark polish on his reputation.

Ruth Stonehouse enacts the breezy, resourceful girl reporter; and Eugene Palletta, who was the innocuous Billy Bartlett in "Fair and Warner" starring May Allison, and who later was seen with Bert Lytell in "Alias Jimmy Valentine," plays Reggie. The part of Angelica is deftly and delightfully enacted by Kathleen Kirkham who, after this production, will form and appear in special pictures made by her own company. Henry Miller, Jr., son of the famous actor-manager, has also an important part in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath."

The picture is one of the big Metro specials. It was directed by Edward Dillon, photographed by W. M. Edmund and adapted from the stage play by June Mathis and A. P. Younger. Special art interiors were designed for it and done under the direction of Sidney Ullman.

NINE SADDLES TO THE HORSE. When Thompson's colt swam the river to get a drink of water that was thought to be about the silliest thing ever. Yet that performance was excelled many times during the late war. And it was a man, not a yearling colt, that broke the record. Astonishing things were done, during the war, many of which, doubtless, have not yet come to light.

The Government's leather (head) expert ordered 845,000 high grade army saddles for just 144,900 cavalry horses. This is about nine saddles per horse. Just why that expert figure he would need such a backlog of saddles for those horses has never been ascertained, but his mental performance clearly puts him in the same boat with Thompson's colt. See if you can solve the riddle: nobody else seems to be able to. Again, another leather expert ordered enough harness at one time to require in their construction 200,000 more hides than the Government could procure in a year's time.

Still another expert (?) ordered six badgers, five nose bags and four covers apiece for those cavalry horses, and another one purchased four curry combs for each of them.

But another "holier a year" man pulled the biggest "buzzer" of them all. He purchased two branding irons apiece for those horses—not ordinary steel branding irons either, but made of copper and fearfully expensive.

To cap the climax, another expert ordered that the horses be branded on the hoofs, regardless of the fact that the marks would grow out in a few weeks.

Verily, Thompson's fool colt had plenty of company.
