On his return to Heppner he expects to be accompanied by his wife and child.

W. G. Scott, Lexington warehouseman and banker was doing business in Heppner Monday afternoon. The big snow hit the Lexington country in about the same proportion that it did around Heppner and will be the means of furnishing a lot of moisture to the growing crops on the Lexington hills.

Mrs. Earl Blake has been reappointed postmaster at Ione. Her former appointment was as Margaret Jones, but in conforming with a ruling of the Department she resigned when she married. The authorities, however, insisted upon her retaining the office and waived the rule in her case.—Ione Independent.

Mrs. Harry Welch and children departed Tuesday for Pendleton, where the family will reside in the future. Mr. Welch intends following them as soon as his business affairs are closed up here. Anyway, Cal Robinson of Lone Rock, Or., will never become bald-headed. Mr. Robinson who is a farmer, is registered at the Imperial. He ambles around the streets of Portland just as he does around in the field at home, baldless. He says he knows Mr. Robinson never wore a hat but once and that was when a posse was out looking for a bad man in the vicinity of Heppner and the only description they had of the fellow was that he was bald-headed. On hearing this description Mr. Robinson dashed madly to the nearest store, bought a hat and wore it until the posse got the man it wanted. But returning in the original statement, it is said to be a scientific fact that hats produce a pressure on certain small veins which feed the roots of the hair and this pressure cuts off the food supply, with baldness as a result. In other words, hats are a poor cultivator for a crop of hair.—Oregonian.

Naturally Mr. Cochran valued the dog highly and it will be a long time before he finds another of like intelligence and training.—Ione Independent.
