(National Republican.)

Certain very clever correspondents and news syndicates established themselves during the eight years of Wilson because of various inside avenues of information which were kindly afforded them by the national administration. Needless to say these correspondents and syndicates posing as non-partisan, were at all rimes pro-Wilson.

Since the Republicans have come into power in Washington they have taken a new tack. They are still pro-Wilson but are compelled, because of circumstances, to try to be more subtle. Some of them have hit upon an ingenious, and, from their standpoint, an excellent scheme. They cannot criticize the present administration without losing their mask of non-partisanship.
