Voting Taxes Is Easy
One more demonstration of how easy it is under the Oregon System of Government to vote taxes onto the taxpayer for the taxpayer to pay if he can and lose his property if he can't pay!

Analysis of the returns from the Portland vote for the fair tax is exceedingly impressive. Practically every precinct where no taxpayers reside went unanimously or almost unanimously for the fair. The North End down town precincts as well as the rooming house and boarding house precincts were the strongest for the fair. Jazz was the keynote of the big event prior to the fair election, the blowing of horns, the toot-ing of whistles and the opening of catouts. And jazz voted along with the taxpayers.

We sincerely believe that even though the fair tax could have been voted upon by taxpayers only it would have carried through by a close majority, for many taxpayers sake of bringing a fair to Portland the exposition tax not only for the sage of bringing a fair to Portland in the hope of great material benefits to come from it but also in the conviction that taxation was the fairest way to spread the financial burden of holding the fair. But no such broad-minded views were held by thousands who voted for the fair tax. It was jazz, the god of noise and show, the prospect of a great time in 1925, the supposed glory of Portland at somebody's else expense, that impelled their favorable votes.

To some extent, this was a repetition. Practically all the heavy tax increases under which the taxpayers of Oregon and Portland are laboring have been voted by the people. The administrative authorities and the legislatures have not been able under the constitution to vote taxes beyond a 6% annual increase. But they have been relieved of responsibility under the Oregon System of Government, by which the people rule. Pass the decision along to the people, that's the dope. The officials in authority can escape all blame.
The people can vote taxes or not, as they choose. If the people don't vote the taxes, nobody can be blamed. If they do vote them, the taxpayer pays.

And measure after measure increasing taxes, practically all of our heavy tax increases, have been voted cheerfully by the people for the taxpayers to pay.

The costliest thing the farmers and homeowners of Oregon ever did was the adoption of the Oregon System of Popular Government whereby it was made easy to pass tax questions to a popular vote and thus escape official or legislative responsibility.
The people rule, in Oregon, yes, but their rule is leading to their ruin in so far as high taxes can contribute to ruin. The farmers wanted the Oregon System. They have it and like Frankenstein, their creation has turned upon them and voted taxes upon them beyond their ability to pay and yet retain a decent living profit from their farming.

Voting taxes onto taxpayers is the most popular outdoor sport of election day in Oregon. And the farmers and small homeowners of the state provided the machinery by which the increasing of taxes are made so easy.

No legislature or official body would have dared increase taxes in Oregon to the extent to which they have been increased under the Oregon System of Popular Government.
—Oregon Voter.
