ROAD MAKING A DAY BY DAY JOB. BY RICHARD LLOYD JONES.

EVERY man is a road-maker. He builds the road over which he himself is to travel. If he is careless and inconsiderate his road will be poorly made and he will find himself stalled in the soft mud of indifference.

The Ancient Romans built, with much labor, the famous Appian Way. To do it they laid out to end great, heavy, flat stones. Time shifted the great blocks of the Appian Way; they were not laid upon a strong bed of little stones.

Many centuries later a Scotchman by the name of McAdam found a better way to build an enduring road. McAdam accepted for his road only very little stones—stones that would slip between his thumb and first finger. The little stones could shift, they could settle and as they shifted and settled the "macadam" road became firmer and better.

The life road-maker, who makes surest of his future lays his road bed in daily deeds of good rather than by seeking only to lay down the large blocks of ambitious performance. The man who gets more out of life and who gives most to life is the man who sees the good in little things—who learns how to use little things—who neglects or despises no detail and who builds his life road constantly and incessantly with little deeds well done.

Measure the deeds of any great man and you will find his achievements have grown out of an experience of doing the small things with patience and painstaking fidelity. The man of moral courage does not reach his moral power by one full leap; it is a matter of road making; he acquires his moral strength step by step.

The architect who conceives the great cathedral or the monumental tower has first learned to use the T-square and the sweep; he has learned the mathematics of weight; he governs the stress and distribution of weight; he has built his road step by step and over it he has reached the thing of strength and beauty.

The road that is without a firm foundation is not the road of an enduring civilization. Soft clay carries no commerce. The road of least resistance is the road that retards progress—that holds back the traveler who would use it. Each day we lay the foundation for the road we are to travel tomorrow.

Life's prizes are not gifts; they are goals; they must be won; we must build the road over which we are to pass to reach them.

safety of America. Admiral Benson had this plan of enlightenment well under way, a matter publicly approved of it, but having done so he then proceeded forthwith to destroy it. Great minds like Providence move in a mysterious way their wonders to perform.

SPECULATIONS, NOT TARIFF, BOOSTED SUGAR

THE United States Tariff Commission has made its report to President Harding on the sugar situation. It states without equivocation that the increase in sugar prices since January was due to "causes not connected with the American tariff."

In filing the suit, the Department of Justice sets forth that there was in a combination and conspiracy in the restraint of trade in raw and refined sugar. The petition alleges that "an orgy of speculation in raw sugar has been indulged in through the instrumentality of the exchange and clearing association (the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, Inc., and the New York Coffee and Clearing Association, Inc.) since February 7th."

In support of this it sets forth that during the month of February "enormous quantities of raw sugar, greatly in excess of quantities customarily dealt in and more than the total stock of raw sugar then in existence have been subject to fictitious 'paper sales'."

All this bears out exactly what the Republican National Committee stated on March 17, in reply to the Democratic charge made at that time that the high price of sugar was due to the Fordney-Cumber tariff. It also bears out the statement at that time to the effect that the Republican Congress had stopped gambling in grain to the detriment of consumers, and there was no reason why there should not be a stop put to gambling in sugar or any other food product to the exploitation of the consumer.

Since that statement was issued, the United States Supreme Court has declared the grain futures act constitutional and it is largely upon the principles of law embodied in that act that the Department of Justice intends to base its prosecution of those it charges with gambling in sugar and fixing fictitious prices to the American consumer.

It was charged by the Democratic National Committee's publicity bureau, by leading Democrats and by a number of demagogues who do not classify themselves as Democrats that the Department of Justice would never do anything in regard to the sugar situation. The investigation was started less than six weeks ago. In the interim, agents of the Department of Justice have been in Cuba, have visited the sugar markets, made exhaustive examinations of books and records, have compiled the data gathered, prepared their case and have commenced, all of which is almost a record for expedition in a case with so many ramifications and involving a problem of so great magnitude.

The action of the Department of Justice in seeking to stop the speculation on sugar by an injunction is a record to crack for those demagogues who have been attacking the courts and what they term "government by injunction." It is the favorite argument of this class of enemies of judicial process that the injunction is never used except against the poor man or the laboring man that it is a weapon only in the hands of the wealthy. The invocation of the injunction as a legal weapon to protect the breakfast table of the working man and bring the wealthy speculator to book conclusively shows the falsity of such propaganda.
