Richard Lloyd Jones Says: BE MASTER OF YOUR JOB.

No job is so difficult and none so disheartening as that of avoiding others. The idea is the man above all work never lives, for he never comes to know the joy of doing, the contentment that comes from creating, nor the glory of serving. Without work there is no rest. Every man wants to think that he is worth something. No man can know what he is worth without work. Work is the test. Man's record in this world is the record of his work, not of recreation. Work is man's noblest expression. All men wish to be noble. All men wish to leave a record. Therefore even they who are idle feign work; they wish, at least, to appear as workers. Genius is sometimes looked upon as a God-given means of making a record without work. The men of greatest genius have always been among the most plodding, hard working and intense—their chiefest genius being their genius for work. It is men of their kind who know that no true work is mental. They who look upon their work as mental are they who fail to invest that work with science, persistence, and power which lifts them above it. Man was not made for work; work was made for man. The man is lost who is servant to his work. The strong man is always master of his job. Work is an educator, and he who would be educated always seeks work which is above him, to which he must grow rather than work beneath him to which he must descend. Real rest comes through change of work. We have work to do to gain our bread. We have other work to do for our delight. Both must be done heartily, strenuously, and with a will—else we fail.

Poem by Uncle John

OLD DOBBIN stood on a grassy knoll—in the shade of a friendly oak; with a look of disdain at the dusty lane, he sniffed at the gas and smoke—and, I couldn't swear that he shed a tear—but these are the words he spoke: "Time was, when I went whizzin'—with the sulky shaft's my heels. I raised a dust like a whirlwind, as I spun its resilient wheels. For I was a steed that indulged in speed—the same as my daily meals. "Then my master prand, would jeer at the crowd, and flash his roll in and staid and handsome and dignified, as a President should be. And the people like what he says and the way he says it. He has not contented himself with merely pleasant platitudes, brief words of greeting and compliment. He has said something. One at a time he has taken up some great topic and discussed it thoroughly, comprehensively and like a statesman. At St. Louis the world court and our foreign relations, at Kansas City the transportation problem, at Hutchinson agriculture and what has been done and what ought to be done to make it more prosperous, at Denver law enforcement, at Cheyenne the mining industry, and so on down the line. His speeches have been instructive, giving the people much information; they have been argumentative, setting out his own views and giving the reasons for them, and they have been brave, not hesitating to take a positive position even upon the most controverted question and boldly to defend it. The people by the ten thousands have heard and read and for the most part have approved these great addresses. Even those who may not have agreed with him at all points have conceived a new admiration for the President, for they have been compelled to recognize his courage and his sincerity and his statesmanship. They have seen in him a sincere, honest, patriotic, God-fearing man, kindly and gracious, anxious to work in harmony with everybody and yet resolutely determined to do his duty as he sees it and to serve the great republic to the very utmost of his ability. The President is winning the West. —Iola (Kan.) Register.

AT LEAST CONSISTENT. REPRESENTATIVE of a company importing news print from Norway and Sweden appeared before the meeting of the Oregon State Teachers Association at Hood River the last of the week and was given the floor in order to make his proposition regarding paper, not made in Oregon or even in the United States, but imported from Scandinavia. He offered to furnish paper at a price substantially less than the one they are now paying. His proposition immediately met with favor in certain quarters, but when it was put to vote, the matter of buying foreign news was voted down. This is something worth calling to the attention of the business men of the state of Oregon. The editors preach buying at home and the use of home products, and here is an exceedingly practical demonstration of the fact that they practice what they preach. This is not always the case. Merchants who talk against the mail order houses at all times have even been known to send away for their printing. —The Dallas Optimist.

COSTS of education are mounting. A higher percentage of the population is being enrolled in schools yearly. Each year more communities are demanding opportunity for their children for a good school training. The people are demanding that the high schools offer a wider range in courses of study so that the interests of students having other than college preparatory aims be met. Can we finance the program? We can through elimination of the small high school. We cannot if we attempt to maintain effective high schools for 15 or 20 pupils. Cities maintain effective high schools at per pupil costs within reason simply because they have large numbers of pupils. Union high schools in the West offer country children as good facilities for high school training as the best of our cities at reasonable per pupil costs because schools serve large numbers of pupils. Many country high schools in the South are providing good facilities at a reasonable cost for the same reason. Where the small district attempts to support a high school for a few pupils the cost is prohibitive. Two high schools in a western state reported per pupil costs of over $1000 per year for 1921. The country cannot finance such a program as this. Careful organization in the interest of economy as well as effectiveness is becoming more and more necessary. Larger units of support must displace the small district high school. —(Dallas) Folk County Itemizer.

WINNING THE WEST. CERTAINLY the President could not expect or ask for a more genuinely friendly and enthusiastic reception than has been accorded him in Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, and Utah at every point where he has stopped. The people have not only turned out in vast numbers, but the greeting they have given him has borne every evidence of being inspired by high personal regard and not merely by respect for the exalted office he holds. The people like to have the man who is President look like a President. And Warren G. Harding pre-eminently looks the part. He is big
