OUR UNIVERSITY.

THROUGHOUT the "questionnaire" being sent to everyone who has in any way been connected with the University of Oregon, President P. L. Campbell is endeavoring to find the exact influence the institution is having on the state and on the nation. What the result will be, with these people scattered in the four corners of the earth, we are sure all Oregonians will await with interest, and perhaps the report will give the University a much stronger status in the future of our commonwealth.

The University is a concrete example of progress. Anyone who has been absent from the campus a few weeks, returning today, will be astounded by the large growth evidenced by every department of the school. In the last ten years the student body has more than doubled, in fact, nearly tripled, with many new buildings entirely surrounding old Deady, Willard and McClure halls, the campus group of the not far distant past. But the President's office reports that the facilities are yet insufficient to care for the great increase in enrollment, and a ten-million dollar endowment campaign has been instituted in an endeavor to keep the University apace with the demands made on it. The campaign, started last year, is attempting to raise a million dollars a year for ten years.

Even in its earlier years, before "going to college" became quite so popular, the University of Oregon made a name for itself. In the athletic world especially it became prominent through its crack athletes, some of whom still hold world records on the track, and it produced great football teams as well. But not alone was this the extent of its influence for many leading men of the state and some of the United States received their college education at Oregon. The influence of the University in those days was great.

Now the University is entering upon a new era. Greater numbers of people are seeking a higher education, and a revolution of educational methods is taking place. Colleges and universities are becoming more like machines, having to be systematized very minutely to care for the wave of students sweeping in upon them. Oregon is changing under these conditions, and probably losing some of its individuality of the old days. But its changes are for a greater service are larger than ever before. Its influence will be much greater—and the caliber of its president is shown by his desire to know just what part the institution is having in the progress of the state and the nation generally. President Campbell has nursed the University of Oregon from its swaddling clothes to the great thriving institution it is today, and he has vision of a still greater Oregon in the years to come.

MR. CLEAVER'S MISTAKE.

WHEN George L. Cleaver made derogatory reference to the "manhood" of our late President in his talk before the state convention of the W. C. T. U. in this city last week he merely proved once more the type of egotistical, intolerant man he is. The remark was most unfortunate, as was the selection of Mr. Cleaver by Governor Fierce as state prohibition officer.

The fact that a man is a radical prohibitionist does not qualify him for the duties of this office, which should be filled by some man with some knowledge of law enforcement, and the ability to choose men as subordinates who are both honest and desirous of enforcing the law. This, according to reports, Mr. Cleaver has been unable to do, and men in touch with the situation seem to be of the opinion that this department of state government is in about as bad shape as was the state penitentiary under the administration of Johnston Smith.

One of Mr. Cleaver's deputies is in jail at Astoria at present, charged with taking a bribe to destroy the evidence against a foreigner caught bootlegging. According to the newspaper report there is little doubt of the agent's guilt. It is also reported that the condition in the state prohibition department is so bad that enforcement officers in other divisions are reluctant to work with Cleaver's deputies.

Most people desire the strict enforcement of the prohibition laws, and Governor Fierce will probably discover in the near future that the fact that a man has run for Congress on the prohibition ticket does not necessarily mean that he is a capable enforcement officer. However, it would indicate that he had a certain strength with prohibition voters, and that may justify such an appointment as seen from the Governor's viewpoint.—The Dalles Optimist.

WHILE the Oregon lines gather part of the transcontinental business that helps Union Pacific System earn a profit, the Oregon and of the system barely pays expenses. During 1922, G. W. R. & N. Co. earned only $82,270 on its Oregon lines, or $6,000 on its valuation of $68,881,747, less than one-tenth of one per cent to apply an interest and dividends. It took $18,310,757 in operating expense and paid out $18,248,487 for labor, fuel, materials, supplies, loss and damage claims, insurance, taxes, rental of equipment and rental of joint facilities. All that was left for the stockholders and owners was the difference, which in turn was more than wiped out by losses on Washington business. The Oregon lines could not have shown any profit were they not credited with main line earnings for hauling Washington business along the Oregon side of the Columbia River between Eastern Washington and Western Washington.—Oregon Voter.

THERE is something wrong with our brand of hard times. Some two years ago people were heard to say that they would store their automobiles because they could not stand the expense of operating it. Since then, the registration of cars in the state has increased from 120,000 to more than 160,000. People said that they could not pay their taxes, and yet during the past three years taxes have been paid up better in Grant county than when we were prosperous. Something is wrong with our hard times. Every jim-crank show has a full house; nearly every dance has walking room only; people are better dressed than we ever saw them and work less. Even the young folks in school have the appearance of being heirs of the ultra wealth. The card games at the pastimes are a continuous performance and the fellows who used to smoke a corn cob pipe or roll their own cigarettes now all smoke the tailor-made brand. Times are hard alright, but the most peculiar brand of hard times we ever saw. We can not get used to broke people wearing ten dollar shoes and riding in a two thousand dollar car, driving thirty miles to a dance and being hard alright, but the most peculiar brand of hard times we ever saw. It is this the way they go when they are broke we hope to have the opportunity of sitting on the side lines and watching a really prosperous people go by.—(Canyon City) Blue Mountain Eagle.

JUDGE GARY'S RUSE.

STOCKHOLDERS of the United States Steel corporation are naturally somewhat divided on the benefits of prohibition, however agreed they are on dividends. There are "dry" stockholders and "wet" stockholders. It will be readily understood then that the "wet" ones did not in the least approve of a recent stratagem employed by Chairman Gary in behalf of prohibition. When the dividend envelopes were mailed, Judge Gary caused to be inserted in a statement of his views regarding the success of prohibition. The elaborate "wets" wrote the dividends but they were accepted at the judge. He had used the corporation's postage to disseminate opinions with which they could not agree.

Briefly Judge Gary asserted his belief that prohibition has resulted in "a large decrease in the use of liquor," at least near the corporation's plants, "a large increase in bank balance of savings deposits, and a noteworthy decrease in the number of jails, asylums and hospitals." These observations are by no means original with Judge Gary, nor are they the exclusive utterances of zealous prohibitionists. Henry Ford has said something of the sort. Last year the Chicago bankers remarked the same effects. From scores of important sources, unimpaired by partisanship, has come the word that prohibition pays.

The chances are that the dividends so blithely accepted by "wet" stockholders of the steel corporation were somewhat larger by reason of these benefits of prohibition. Certainly they were no smaller. It is proper to assume that a workman who has money in the bank, who no longer dissipates his pay check at the saloon, is a more efficient workman than he was in the old days. These "wet" stockholders must have a care, for it seems they are leaving bricks at the goose which lays the golden eggs. Prohibition, of course, is not a tremendous success—we admit that success signifies the thorough stamping out of liquor traffic. But that it has returned big dividends as a social and economic investment few will deny—and they only because they are hopelessly wedded to their apitites, or because they used to profit by the sale of liquor.

Judge Gary's critics have retorted that much grape wine is made in the homes of Gary, Ind. This is unlawful, the judge will admit, but it is his privilege to ask them if they regard grape wine in the home as an evil equal or even comparable to the saloon. The most ambitious liquor would have to make and imbibe a great deal of grape wine to expend a single pay check, whereas in the days of yore a fellow could rid himself of that check in an hour or so. The judge probably would not defend the grapes were it not for the fact that he is in his suggesting that existing violations of the law do not begin to bulk as large in their economic effect, as did the evils of licensed traffic.

All the evidence of law violation relatively speaking, is on the surface. We read of dissolve parties, of court cases, of captured stills and of run-runnings, because these are violations of the law and as such are news. But what we do not read is the unprinted story of the average home, where less money is wasted than ever before; where more comforts are installed; where more men and women who are filling their place in society today because they were spared the effects of that system we have abandoned. The violations are the froth of the surface, but the current of national life is itself clearer and finer and more energetic than ever before.

We do not believe that this matter of modifying the prohibition law will ever come to a test. There is no real demand for it, when the country at large is considered. But if it does, among the staunchest champions of the present law will be numbered big business men, wholesalers, manufacturers, and retail dealers. For these have been long convinced that prohibition has largely increased the prosperity of America.

HALLOWEEN NOTICE.

We wish to call attention that the City Council does not desire to place any restriction upon any reasonable or lawful enjoyment or to interfere with anyone enjoying the business of Halloween; but the council is not unmindful of the fact that heretofore it has been the custom of some on Halloween, without regard for the lives or rights of others, to place obstructions upon the sidewalks and streets and to maliciously destroy property of others. The council insists that any person or persons placing obstructions upon the sidewalks or streets or destroying or molesting the property of others shall be arrested and prosecuted, and we request that the citizens arrest or report, and instruct the Marshal to arrest and prosecute all persons obstructing the sidewalks or streets or destroying or molesting the property of others.

Dated this 25th day of October, 1923.
